

Chapter 409 The World Is So Small

Sabrina recognized the potential of the Internet for earning money, especially as increasing people engaged in social media.

Creating captivating videos could be a lucrative venture in today's digital age. Some individuals produced intriguing and valuable content, earning income through advertising. Others showcased the allure of their craft, using the Internet as a platform to draw in potential customers.

Despite still needing to create a video, Sabrina saw an opportunity to leverage the Internet to expand her reach and attract more people.

After receiving a client's inquiry, Sabrina engaged in detailed discussions to better understand the client's needs. With a clear understanding of the requirements, she prepared a quote.

The majority of those who came to study here were financially capable. This client came specifically for Sabrina's services, promptly agreeing to pay a deposit and scheduling the shoot for the upcoming weekend.

After exploring various photography studios on the job-hunting website, Sabrina chose a few that appealed to her, including the studio one of Blayze's friends owned. She then submitted her resume to each of them.

It was nearing midnight when Sabrina completed her work. After washing her face and brushing her teeth, she retired to bed.

Without specific plans for the next day, Sabrina prioritized self-care and a good night's sleep.

Sabrina felt like she had barely drifted off to sleep when the phone's insistent ringing jolted her awake.

Blinking sleepily, she squinted at the bright sunshine filtering through the gap in the curtains and shifted to the other side of the pillow.

With a lazy stretch, Sabrina rolled over and reached for her phone on the bedside table, only to discover it was already past 8 a.m.

The call was from an unknown number.

Yawning, Sabrina answered the phone, "Hello! Who is it?"

A man's voice responded from the other end of the line. "Is that Miss Chavez?"

"Yes, it is," she confirmed.

"Hello, this is Allen from Caitlan Studio. I've had the chance to review your resume, and I'm impressed with your work. I want to invite you for an interview at our studio. When would it be convenient for you?"

Sabrina was suddenly fully alert as she sat up excitedly in bed. "I have plenty of time recently," she replied eagerly. "I can go for an interview at any time."

"Okay, then how about two o'clock this afternoon?"

"That would be great."

After giving Sabrina the studio address, Allen reminded her, "Please, be on time."

"I will."

After Sabrina ended the call, she took a moment to search the address Allen gave her. It was in a commercial office building, not a remote location.

Satisfied, she relaxed on the bed for a while before showering and preparing for the interview in the afternoon.

While having breakfast, Sabrina received a response from another studio inviting her for an interview.

Uncertain about the duration of the afternoon interview, Sabrina decided to play it safe and scheduled the second interview for the following morning.

In the afternoon, while en route to Caitlan Studio in a taxi, Sabrina received an interview invitation from a third studio, which happened to be the studio of Blayze's friend. The interview was for the following afternoon.

Sabrina arrived at Caitlan Studio five minutes before the appointment. After announcing her arrival to the receptionist and stating her purpose, the receptionist asked her to wait in an office.

As she waited, Sabrina took the opportunity to observe the studio. She noted that it was well-decorated and had an inviting ambiance.

After a brief wait in the office, a gentle-looking young man in his thirties entered the room. Sabrina immediately stood up and introduced herself, "Hi, I'm Sabrina."

"Hello, I'm Allen."

The two shook hands before Allen gestured toward a seat and smiled warmly. "Please have a seat."

During the interview, Allen asked Sabrina about her previous work experience and inquired about her original work.

Sabrina and Allen engaged in casual conversation, creating a comfortable atmosphere.

"I have all I need to know about you. Is there anything you would like to ask about the studio?" Allen asked.

Allen happily answered Sabrina's questions and provided her with the information she wanted.

The interview concluded after approximately an hour.

Allen promised to inform Sabrina of the interview results three days later.

As Sabrina left the office building, she took a deep breath, feeling confident about her performance.

As for the second interview, Sabrina felt less at ease compared to the first one.

The interviewer at this studio, a middle-aged man, consistently scrutinized her and even broached the topic of race during their communication, making Sabrina feel uncomfortable.

Sabrina wanted to work with people who would respect and welcome her in a friendly environment.

Due to her discomfort with the interviewer, she decided she didn't want to work here even if they offered her a job.

In the afternoon, Sabrina attended the third interview at Saleel Studio, located downtown.

From a distance, Sabrina spotted the signboard of Saleel Studio.

The entire front facade was constructed of glass, creating a transparent and open aesthetic that provided a clear view of the tastefully decorated interior.

Sabrina noticed several mannequins posing in the window, showcasing a variety of outfits. Some were dressed in modern clothing, while others adorned traditional attire.

It indicated that the studio allowed patrons to borrow clothing for photo shoots.

The interviewer at Saleel Studio was a local woman named Liliana.

Liliana was warm and welcoming toward Sabrina. It may have been due to Sabrina and the studio boss sharing the same nationality. Either way, the interview was a seamless and

As Liliana accompanied Sabrina to the door, a man and a woman emerged from the film selection room, talking and laughing.

When the woman saw Sabrina, a glimmer of recognition crossed her face. She took a closer inspection, and a realization dawned on her. Suddenly, her expression and demeanor turned solemn.

With a raised chin, she turned to the man beside her and inquired, "William, who is she?"

William appeared to be in his thirties and wore a suit.

He glanced at Sabrina. Although he didn't recognize Sabrina, he pieced together the situation by seeing Liliana by Sabrina's side. "She must be here for the photographer interview."

"Ah, I see," the woman replied, giving Sabrina a significant look.

"What's the matter? Do you know her?"

"No, I don't," the woman replied, though she did recall a previous altercation with Sabrina.

Encountering the rude and lowly Sabrina here was the last thing the woman expected. It, indeed, was a small world.

When the woman reflected on her experience, she remembered being reprimanded by the manager and humiliated by being kicked out of the store. Sabrina and her friend had looked smug at that time, further adding to her embarrassment. Even after several months, the anger in her heart still simmered, and upon seeing Sabrina again, it all came flooding back.

She was determined to let Sabrina know how powerful she was!

William noticed something was amiss but chose not to probe further since the woman said she didn't know Sabrina.

Had Sabrina turned around, she would have instantly recognized the woman.

Several months ago, while on a flight to Austrain, Sabrina and Bettie encountered a woman who was being difficult and demanding to switch seats with Sabrina.

Later, at the Sandra Building in Linbourne, Sabrina and Bettie unexpectedly ran into the same woman from the plane. A dispute arose over a watch, leading to a conflict that escalated to the point where the manager had to escort the woman out of the store.

However, at this moment, Sabrina didn't turn around and recognize the woman.

After saying goodbye to Liliana, Sabrina explored the city's attractions and returned to the hotel at nightfall.

During the following two days, while awaiting the interview results, Sabrina occupied her time with various activities.

The interview results were soon released.

As anticipated, Sabrina passed the interviews for Saleel Studio and Caitlan Studio but failed the second one, which she had no intention of working at.

After comparing the conditions of the two studios, Sabrina ultimately decided to join Saleel Studio.

The Saleel Studio had many customers from Sabrina's home country and was known for its high foot traffic, with many locals coming in to try out the latest clothing. These factors significantly influenced Sabrina's decision to choose Saleel Studio.
