

Chapter 1200 The Gain From The Operation

"The mission has been accomplished. Let's head back."

Trevor clapped his hands signifying the end of the operation.

All the killers from the Hidden Assassins in the warehouse had been caught.

These killers were all outlaws, and they were extremely cunning and also possessed a strong anti-reconnaissance ability. If any of them managed to sneak out of the port, they would likely cause trouble in the future.

A black jeep drove into the port grounds and came to a halt.

Those in the jeep were other Klein members who came to wind up.

There was a broad smile on Margaret's face as she stuck her head out of the window.

"A job well done, Dragon! You have made a great contribution in such little time!"

Trevor smiled and directed his gaze at the warehouse.

He could make out the policemen collecting all the contraband goods that had been found in the warehouse.

The staff from Klein took in the killers from the Hidden Assassins and began interrogating them secretly.

The regular police officers couldn't get to know about these things.

Trevor was not as calm and gentle as portrayed by his appearance.

Based on the words of Grave-keeper, there was still at least one Mobius member in Corden.

As long as they could catch that member, he would have the chance to find out the whereabouts of his father and grandfather.

The thought of his father and grandfather caused a change in Trevor's mood. He closed his eyes, clenched his fists, and gritted his teeth. He would find and save them soon, no matter the cost.

Trevor slowly opened his eyes and found Margaret staring at him curiously.

He took in a deep breath and asked, "If the Murray family is in charge of the warehouse and the port, we should be able to hold them accountable, right?"

Margaret shrugged and said, "It's obvious that the Murray family was well prepared. Their company managed the port and put the blame on someone who knew nothing about what happened. We found out that he was only employed temporarily and knew nothing about the dealings here. He was just a scapegoat."

Trevor nodded slowly. He had been anticipating this outcome and was not disappointed.

Hidden Assassins was a notorious international killer organization, but Mobius was even more powerful than them. As long as the head of the Murray family knew what he was doing, he would not leave any stone unturned. He was bound to always be on guard and cautious.

"Still, it doesn't matter though." A meaningful smile was visible on Trevor's face.

He looked around briefly and noticed Edlin, who was busy with something close by.

Trevor lowered his voice and said, "I have set a time bomb for them."

Margaret turned to look at Trevor with a bewildered expression.

Trevor smiled and said, "As long as we find the right time to mislead the spy hidden in the police station, it will come as a surprise and have an unexpected effect."

Margaret was suddenly excited. Her head was filled with so many ideas and plans.

Unable to contain her excitement, she asked, "So, what's your plan?"

Trevor chuckled. "I have already caused so much trouble to the Murray family. When they receive the information from the spy, they will want to have their revenge on me."

Margaret's face fell when she heard those words. She shook her head and said, "Then you're in great danger!"

Trevor waved his hand, dismissing her fears. "Judging from the attitude of that spy, he seems to have misunderstood my identity and thinks I'm a police informant. I'd like to use his misconception about me to pretend to be the informant, so that the Murray family can let their guard down."

Margaret frowned and bit her lower lip. She was filled with anxiety and lost in her own thoughts.

Trevor smiled and said, "Don't worry. I'm good with my fists. John can testify on my behalf."

John nodded in agreement to Trevor's words.

He thought Trevor was not just good at fighting but was extremely brilliant at it.

Trevor smiled and nodded.

"Well, it's settled then. I will have to reduce the number of times I go to the base. If anything comes up, contact me through Klein's special communication system!"

 Bountiful Free Coins are waiting for you, don't miss out!

GO NOW