

Chapter 1161 Waking Up

Within the majestic halls of the Shadow Palace, Liam pulled the plug and roused from the Dream Capsule.

Swiftly rising to a seated position, he checked the items acquired through the trial illusion.

Upon confirming that all exchanged items were successfully retrieved from the trial illusion and stowed in Compressed Space Containers, Liam exhaled a sigh of relief.

Suddenly, the figure of Vogel began to materialize before Liam's Dream Capsule.

Vogel smiled, his eyes reflecting genuine admiration as they focused on Liam.

He praised, "Kid, you've done well! It's been quite some time since someone bested a foe beyond their rank in the myriad tribes' battleground. Bravo!"

It was evident that Vogel held a genuine appreciation for Liam's prowess.

Liam modestly gestured, suppressing his eagerness to inspect his spoils, and posed the question weighing heavily on his thoughts to Vogel.

"Sir, I've acquired the privilege to draw the Shadow Sword through the trial illusion. May I proceed to do so now?"

Vogel nodded in affirmation. "Certainly."

Vogel kindly pointed to the designated area for Liam. As Liam followed Vogel's direction, a sword came into view within the grand hall of the Shadow Palace.

It was the Shadow Sword!

Continuing, Vogel elaborated, "Drawing the sword requires a unique approach. It's not a matter of sheer force; you need to showcase your capability. Success hinges on the acceptance of the Shadow Sword. Do you grasp this concept?"

Liam nodded with solemn understanding.

After a pause, Vogel added, "You possess remarkable talent, yet it's crucial to note that the Shadow Sword's choice isn't solely talent-driven. Therefore, success isn't guaranteed. Failing to draw the Shadow Sword signifies a misalignment of destiny. Don't be discouraged if that happens."

Touched by Vogel's words, Liam felt a sense of warmth and expressed his gratitude. "I truly appreciate your guidance!"

Vogel nodded, indicating Liam to proceed with the sword-drawing attempt.

Just as Liam prepared to approach for the sword-drawing, Idris stirred from his Dream Capsule.

Contrary to Liam's composure, Idris appeared frightened; it was evident that he hadn't passed the trial. He seemed more rattled by the experience than anything else.

Liam was uncertain if everyone faced identical trials. After all, Vogel never mentioned anything regarding this aspect.

Nevertheless, Liam surmised that the trials were likely varied. Otherwise, Susannah, with her limited capabilities, wouldn't have been able to partake in the trial. She had been merely escorted into the Shadow Palace by the Prescott family, after all.

Upon awakening, Idris beheld Liam with astonishment, visibly taken aback to find him in the Shadow Palace.

After a brief moment, Idris seemed to grasp the circumstances.

A smug grin formed on his lips as he taunted Liam, "You're quite fortunate, aren't you? You followed our team here, right?"

After a pause, he added, "You owe your presence here to our team. What rewards did you receive? You should show your appreciation by giving me some."

Liam frowned disapprovingly at Idris, detecting his greed, yet opted not to engage in response.

Vogel made a casual comment, saying to Idris, "This lad isn't like you, ousted by the trial. He not only triumphed in the trial but also secured the chance to draw the Shadow Sword."