

Chapter 1192 Seventh Rank

Time flew by effortlessly, and within a few hours, Liam, Laura, and Shayla all achieved significant breakthroughs!

Thanks to Liam's gifts, Laura and Shayla had each absorbed a Ten-Color Element Stone successfully.

Empowered by the Ten-Color Element Stone, Shayla awakened her special power of the fire element, while Laura unlocked her special power of the wind element.

Liam was delighted with their new special powers; the fire and wind elements were among the strongest elements after all.

Naturally, Laura and Shayla were also over the moon. Now, not only were they more powerful, but they were also more capable of supporting Liam.

They both wanted to help him, and they both hated the idea of being a burden, so the power boost was what they had always wanted.

Meanwhile, Liam had experienced a surge in his spiritual power, almost doubling as he advanced to the seventh rank.

This advancement allowed him to use his spiritual power for "internal viewing", a skill typically reserved for eighth-rank Primogem Warriors.

To his delight, he now could even see his own heart!

He marveled at the colored dots on his heart's surface, representing the various special powers he now possessed.

In addition, deeper within his heart was the fragment of the Heart of Life.

And in the deepest part of his heart was the white light Liam had always wanted to understand better.

As he studied it more closely, it seemed that about a third of the white light had been restored.

Seeing this brought Liam a bit of relief. With this white light shining a little more brightly inside his heart, he felt more confident.

After all, it had been this white light that had saved him from countless dangerous situations before. Naturally, he trusted it deeply.

After scanning his body, Liam tested his new abilities.

He attempted to fly, and although a bit unsteady at first, he managed to do it successfully.

He was fast in the air, but upon landing, he looked a bit disappointed.

Because his current flying speed wasn't as fast as when he used his Lightning Wings.

So, despite his initial plan to retire the Lightning Wings, he eventually decided that it would be best to keep using them for now.

Liam then delved into experimenting with condensing his special powers.

This time, he succeeded on his first try!

However, his success was limited to the special power of the earth element he was most familiar with and skilled in wielding.

Liam then applied this newfound skill to craft an armor that was both sturdy and comfortable, fitting him perfectly. Upon brief testing, he discovered that his defense had improved by approximately thirty percent, all thanks to the armor forged from his special power of the earth element.

As for his life-draining power, it could not be condensed.

He was not really familiar with his special power of the light element, so there was no progress on that front.

A pensive look crept into Liam's eyes as a thought occurred to him.

He realized that while he was able to level up his defenses, he was still short on offensive options.

If only he could unlock another special power, preferably something like the metal or fire elements, which were known for packing a punch, it would greatly enhance his power.

Realizing this, Liam sat down and pulled out a Ten-Color Element Stone from his Compressed Space Containers. He believed perhaps he could still unlock a new special power.

Sure enough, he quickly sensed the presence of the special power of the metal element.

However, as he began refining the Ten-Color Element Stone to unlock this new special power, his body rebelled, almost as if it were on the verge of collapsing.

The special power of the metal element was outright rejected!

This failure left Liam feeling weak and drained.

Puzzled, he furrowed his brow. How come he had failed?

He had awakened other special powers the same way previously, so what had gone wrong this time?

Baffled, Liam sought out help from Carlden.

He said, "I was at the mountain base trying to awaken my special power of the metal element just now. While I felt its presence, I failed right at the crucial moment. Any idea what went wrong?"

Carlden coughed lightly and mulled over Liam's words for a moment before responding, "Honestly, I'm not really sure. But you don't normally see folks awakening too many special powers. Take your time. Maybe you should first focus on honing the special powers you've already got."

Liam let out a sigh and said, "I understand that. But if I'm going to save Julie and Asher from Adamson, I need to be more powerful. Right now, I'm not strong enough to defeat Adamson. That's why I want another special power to improve my chances of rescuing Julie and Asher safely!"

Hearing this, Carlden cracked a smile.

"Don't worry; I know just the person who can help you with this," he said reassuringly. "And you'll probably be meeting him soon!"

Liam looked at Carlden with a spark of intrigue in his eyes, eagerly anticipating what he would say next.

Carlden continued, "You see, our master has been wanting to see you. He's been waiting at Mount Moria for a while now. Head to the mountain's back. Once you're there,
