

Chapter 1285 Son Of Emperor Hoffman

Blue Star?

Could it be that Liam had ties to Emperor Hoffman?

Was there a chance he was Emperor Hoffman's son?

Caden believed if that were true, then his idea of finding a mentor for Liam suddenly seemed unnecessary.

Even though the Citadel Guardian held a significant position as a Human Sovereign, he could never match a father's unwavering commitment to his own child.

Seeing Caden's astonishment, Sheldon allowed himself a subtle smile and said, "For now, I haven't found any solid evidence to confirm this relationship. Perhaps Liam and Emperor Hoffman just have the same surname by coincidence. It's merely speculation."

Caden nodded thoughtfully at Sheldon's words, pondering the implications. "So, should I still proceed with finding a mentor for Liam?"

Sheldon nodded affirmatively. "I believe it's still a prudent course of action. After all, if Emperor Hoffman truly intended to personally train Liam, he would have done so by now."

Caden agreed with Sheldon's reasoning and prepared to discuss the matter further with Liam.

Meanwhile, Liam had already left the training room.

His condition had almost returned to normal.

As he stepped out of the room, he encountered Cecil, who had been eagerly waiting for him.

"Liam, my friend!" Cecil exclaimed with excitement. "You were phenomenal in the arena missions! You might not realize it, but you've caught the attention of some very influential people! Promise me that you won't forget me when you make it big! Look out for me in the future, alright?"

Liam chuckled softly. "Cecil, you were the one who encouraged me to join the arena missions in the first place. That alone was a huge help. Besides, I consider you a friend. Friends look out for each other."

Cecil beamed with delight at Liam's words, thinking he had indeed made a wise decision to make friends with Liam.

Unable to contain his enthusiasm, Cecil continued, "Your performance in the arena battles is truly outstanding! Such achievements are rare, even among the entire Human Clan! Only Emperor Hoffman was able to do that before! By the way, have you heard about Emperor Hoffman..."

Just as Cecil was about to delve deeper into the conversation, he suddenly noticed another figure standing nearby.

With a quick glance, Cecil's expression changed to one of surprise.

It was Caden, the Lord of Rosefinch!

Cecil promptly lowered his head and stepped aside to make way for Caden.

Caden fixed his gaze on Liam, exuding a subtle aura of authority.

Liam immediately felt the pressure like he was being pressed down by a mountain.

Yet, Liam remained composed, meeting Caden's gaze calmly.

He recognized Caden as the Lord of Rosefinch and knew he had no reason to fear him.

When Caden saw Liam's unruffled demeanor, his appreciation for Liam grew. He quickly eased off the pressure.

He then posed a direct question to Liam. "Aren't you afraid of me, young man? After all, I am the Lord of Rosefinch, the highest authority in the Rosefinch Galaxy. Aren't you concerned that I might harm you?"

Liam shook his head gently and replied, "I haven't done anything wrong, so there's no reason for me to be afraid."

Witnessing Liam's calm and collected response, Caden couldn't help but entertain a flicker of doubt.

Liam carried himself with a composure remarkably akin to that of Emperor Hoffman.

Could it be possible that Liam was indeed Emperor Hoffman's son?
