Married At First Sight Chapter 3560

Married At First Sight Chapter 3560 – Clarissa spoke with a bitter smile, “Later, I realized Kathryn was only pretending to be weak. Every time Shiloh tried to frame her, Kathryn not only escaped but also managed to turn the tables, exposing Shiloh’s schemes. Little by little, I grew more disappointed in Shiloh, while Kathryn began to reveal her skills and courage in the company. I realized her true potential; she was born to do business and be a strong woman.

Once I understood her capabilities, I continued scolding her in the company for a while to maintain her cover. But as she learned more about the Farrell Group, I began to delegate power to her. By the time everyone realized it, they could no longer control her. After all, she is my daughter. I owe her so much—I never fed her or even held her. I must make up for that. No matter how she treats me, I will endure it. If it were anyone else, I would have taken their life the moment they betrayed me.”

Pedro remained silent, knowing that everything Clarissa said was true.

Clarissa continued, “Kathryn always said that if I made a mistake, I must bear the consequences. She believes that if something doesn’t belong to her, she won’t take it, even if offered. But if it does, no one can take it away. She’s not like me—cruel and indifferent to family ties. She has a conscience, a sense of morality, and values loyalty.

I can foresee my end. I don’t want her to witness my downfall and tragic death. We are mother and daughter, after all. Seeing me die horribly would only hurt her and damage her relationships with those in Wiltspoon. If I hadn’t had a feud with them, Kathryn would have gotten along well with them—they’re all similar in nature and admire each other.

Pedro, take Kathryn away from Jensburg in the next couple of days. Once you leave, don’t return. Let her forget about the Farrell family’s affairs.”

Clarissa could see her own defeat coming. She planned to take Audrey and Liberty with her, though whether she would succeed was uncertain. What if she died, but they survived?

Previously, she thought that if she died, Kathryn would remain and someone would take over, keeping the Farrell family in her line. But then there was Serenity in Wiltspoon. Serenity was pregnant, and they wouldn’t let her come, meaning the eldest sister’s bloodline would continue. The position might not go to Kathryn after all.

And if her plot succeeded, knowing Kathryn’s nature, she wouldn’t accept everything from the Farrell family. In that case, Clarissa decided to let her daughter go. She would no longer insist on Kathryn taking over everything.

Clarissa added, "I've sorted out my personal property. You can take the money I've set aside and go as far as you can. Then, hide your identity and start a new life. With the wealth I've prepared, you'll have no trouble making a comeback."

Clarissa had been in charge of the Farrell Group for decades, gradually transferring company assets into her personal wealth, which had become quite substantial.

Finally, Clarissa took out a bag of powder and handed it to Pedro. He took it, looked at it, then at her, waiting for an explanation.

"This is the drug I gave Kathryn that night," Clarissa explained. "She was cautious and only took one sip, but it's potent. Even a single sip weakened her for a week. When you return, mix it into the tonic soup you prepare for her. Once she drinks it and falls asleep, you can take her away from Jensburg."
