

Married At First Sight Chapter 3577

Dear Reader, thank you for your donation. Your support helps me share exciting novels with you. Stay connected for more thrilling reads—

Married At First Sight Chapter 3577 – When Jane first took in Titus, he was still a baby and couldn't speak. He was probably cared for by a nanny and didn't have strong memories of his biological parents. After a few years with Jane, he even forgot the nanny he was once close to. Now, he's attached to the Johnson family.

When a child is that young, they naturally bond with whoever cares for them.

"Aunt Seren, is Sonny really okay?" Titus asked, concerned as he looked at his sleeping friend. He touched Sonny's forehead, then his own, to compare their temperatures.

Serenity reassured him, "Sonny is perfectly fine."

Titus thought for a moment and offered, "If Sonny gets sick, I'll check his pulse and get some medicine for him."

Serenity asked, "Have you learned how to check pulses and prescribe medicine?"

Titus admitted, "Not yet, but I've seen my master and his grandfather do it. When I first got to Medicine Valley, I had a cold, so I know what medicine I took. My master's grandfather has it, and I can get it for Sonny."

Titus was eager to learn medicine, but at just three or four years old, he was still too young to fully understand it. He had only observed his master and his grandfather, thinking he could do the same.

Serenity, worried that Titus might actually try to get medicine, quickly said, "Titus, everyone's illness is different. The medicine you took might not work for Sonny, and it could even be harmful. Medicines can be dangerous if not used properly. If you're worried, we can make Sonny some ginger soup in the morning to ward off any cold."

Titus nodded, understanding that ginger soup could help, and seemed reassured. Serenity gently patted his head and said, "It's still early. Go back to sleep."

"Okay," Titus agreed, and quickly drifted off to sleep again under Serenity's watchful eye.

Once she was sure Titus was asleep, Serenity quietly left the children's room, careful not to wake him. She envied how easily children could fall back asleep, unlike adults who often struggled to do so.

Instead of returning to her room, Serenity went downstairs.

The Johnson family's butler was already up. When he saw her, he greeted her warmly, asking if she was hungry since the chef was already preparing breakfast.

"It's normal for pregnant women to get hungry quickly," the butler noted with a smile. "Our eldest lady had the same experience."

The chef started work early, around five in the morning, to prepare breakfast for everyone. The household staff would request their breakfast preferences the day before, and if they didn't, they would eat whatever the chef prepared.

Others in the household usually started work around six in the morning, depending on their roles.

Married At First Sight Chapter 3578

Dear Reader, thank you for your donation. Your support helps me share exciting novels with you. Stay connected for more thrilling reads—join my WhatsApp channel!

Married At First Sight Chapter 3578 – The butler, like others in the household, typically worked from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. However, since they lived in the villa, they were available to work overtime if needed. The master of the house ensured they were well-compensated for any extra hours, and bonuses often exceeded their base salary, making the work worthwhile.

"Good morning, butler. I couldn't sleep, so I thought I'd go for a walk. I'm not hungry yet, so I'll have breakfast with your eldest young lady when she gets up," Serenity said.

The butler smiled and reminded her, "Ma'am York, be sure to wear an extra coat. The morning dew is heavy, and it's chilly outside."

Serenity nodded, "I've got an extra coat on."

"Please be careful during your walk, and come back when it gets light. Our eldest young lady usually wakes up at dawn."

"I will," Serenity assured him.

The butler saw her to the door, watching as she walked down the stairs before returning inside.

The villa was still quiet, with the street lights in the yard illuminating the early morning darkness. They would automatically switch off when daylight came. FC Manor was large, much like Wildridge Manor. Serenity had visited several times and was familiar with the grounds. She walked through the front yard and into the backyard.

There, she encountered Tim, who was out for his morning jog. He smiled as he greeted her, "Ms. York."

"Tim, you're up early for a jog!"

Tim nodded, "I start every day with a morning run. Afterward, I take a hot bath, have breakfast, and head to work."

"Your routine is impressive," Serenity remarked with a smile.

"I'm used to it," Tim replied. "But what brings you out so early? The sun isn't even up yet."

"I woke up and couldn't fall back asleep, so I decided to go for a walk," Serenity explained.

Tim nodded in understanding and cautioned, "Just be careful. It rained a bit last night, so some paths are still wet and could be slippery."

"I'll stick to the dry paths," Serenity assured him.

She always stayed on the main roads, avoiding the winding paths in the backyard where she might slip. With few people around at this hour, a fall could go unnoticed.

"Go ahead with your run, Tim. I'll take a slow walk and head back in time for breakfast."

Tim gave her a few more reminders before jogging off.

Serenity continued her walk, and soon heard Jane calling her name. She turned to see Jane approaching, carrying Avah.

When they got closer, Serenity asked, "What are you doing out so early with Avah?"

"I saw you from the balcony and thought I'd join you for a walk. Avah woke up, so I brought her along."

When left alone, Avah would sit up and play quietly on the bed or wake her brother, Enzo, by kicking him. If adults didn't respond to Avah's crying, Enzo would stop crying and join her in playing.