The Ex-Husband's Revenge Chapter 118

Iris's heart sank. She knew that the group did not have good intentions. He hurriedly pulled Leon's arm and ran toward the top.

However, she was in too much of a panic. Her foot slipped on the step, and she staggered before she fell toward the stone steps.

"Iris, careful!" Leon was shocked. Thankfully, he was quick as he reached out and grabbed Iris's soft and delicate waist, pulling her into his arms.

"It hurts..." Iris shouted out in pain. The slip twisted her ankle, and a stabbing pain shot from her foot. It hurt so much that she almost shed tears.

"Iris, are you okay? Where are you hurt?" Leon's expression changed as he hurriedly held Iris out from his arms and anxiously checked on Iris's condition.

"I think I sprained my ankle..." Iris's face was pale. She bit her lips to withstand the pain.

"Despicable!" Leon was furious. He suddenly shot a sharp look at the four men.

If Iris was not startled by them, she would not have sprained her ankle.

It was as simple as that. It did not matter if they planned for it or not, there was no way he would let them off easily!
