Married at First Sight Chapter 2687-“Trenton, you ba*tard. When you grew up, you teamed up with Camryn to bully me! I already knew that you were not well-intentioned when you went to visit the prison. I thought you missed your parents, but it turned out that you were trying to hurt me and my parents’ property.

Trenton, I also have a share of my parents’ property. Don’t think about monopolizing it all by yourself! The person my parents love most is me. They will not transfer all the property in their name to yours. From now on, don’t go there to bother my parents.”

Carrie also went to visit the prison, only to find out that Trenton went to the prison that day to ask his parents to transfer their property that had not been seized to his name and only to him. Neither she nor Camryn had a share.

Camryn was not his father’s biological child, so it was natural that he could not be divided. But she was her parents’ biological child, and she was their parents’ most beloved child. How could she not be divided?

Carrie had consulted a lawyer and was preparing to file a lawsuit with Camryn to regain everything. She never thought that Trenton would have the idea of a monopoly.

It is true that one cannot judge a person solely by their appearance.

Trenton, who usually seemed very sensible and kind, was actually so ambitious.

Brenda and Amy, however, stated that this had to be Camryn’s idea, not Trenton’s.

Camryn was aware that the portion of the family property that was now in her possession would be thrown out and that she was actually suing. However, considering the close cousin relationship between Trenton and Camryn, it appeared highly likely that Trenton was a transitional individual if his parents had transferred all the property into his name.

All the assets of the Newman family might end up in Camryn’s hands, and she would be unable to win the lawsuit.

Carrie's parents were still alive, and their property belonged to them. They could give it to whomever they wanted. She had reached adulthood, and her parents no longer had the responsibility to raise her. If they didn't want to give her money, what could she do?

After analysis by the two aunts, they found that Carrie was so furious that she no longer cared about being afraid of Callum and those wolf dogs. She immediately ran to Trenton and kept calling Trenton to urge Trenton to come out to see her.

Then there was the scene just now, where she slapped Trenton as soon as she met him.

Trenton knew it well. He knew that the request he made to his parents after visiting the prison would sooner or later be known to Carrie.

Trenton said, "My parents can make whatever arrangements they want. If they really gave it to you, can you hold on? Do you have the ability?"

Carrie: "You don't care whether I can keep it or not. What is mine is mine. I can spend it as I like. Trenton, don't let Camryn trick you. She is deceiving you. She wants all the Newman family's properties. We really have it in our hands, but we have nothing to do.

My parents have worked hard for half their lives to build this foundation. Do you really want to give it away?

"When my grandparents and my second uncle were alive, they worked hard. This family and the family property are all due to their contributions. They were not built by my parents from scratch." Trenton retorted to Carrie.

If it was a fortune that her parents built from scratch, Camryn would not fight or snatch it away.

But Trenton would not leave it to Carrie.

Carrie's temperament and ability are such that if they were left entirely to Carrie, she would go bankrupt.

"Second sister, don't listen to your eldest and second aunts. You fell for their trick, and they want to use you to take our property. I promised my parents that after they transfer the property to my name, I will protect your daily expenses and won't let you live on the streets and go hungry. If you find a good man to marry in the future, I will also prepare a generous dowry for you."

They were, after all, biological siblings. Trenton would never do anything so heinous. Even though he knew Carrie was nothing, he had to ensure her normal life and would not allow her to starve to death. Of course, he would only protect her basic life.

It's impossible for Carrie to want to live like she did before!

If Trenton didn't promise like this, his parents wouldn't agree to transfer all the property to his name.

Mr. Newman and his wife both knew what kind of virtue their daughter had. After Trenton visited the prison and told them about his plan, they both approved of it and agreed to transfer their property to his name. Originally, he was his parents' successor.

It is true that the child that parents loved most was Carrie, but they never regarded Carrie as their successor.

Married at First Sight Chapter 2688-Being strict with him and making him independent from an early age was all it took to make him his successor.

How could a successor take over if he couldn't become self-reliant?

It's just that he was still young, and his parents didn't say it openly. Now that he was an adult, Carrie had become troublesome after being released from prison. In order to save the family property, his parents agreed to transfer the property to his name.

He promised to protect Carrie's basic life. He would no longer pay Carrie's living expenses once she was able to support herself. However, if Carrie were to marry in the future, he would undoubtedly provide her with a sizable dowry.

He also made it clear that Camryn would not want this little bit of their family property.

Camryn wanted justice that belonged to her.

“My parents won’t agree. They won’t agree. Don’t be wishful thinking!” Carrie knew that her parents had promised Trenton, but she was just deceiving herself.

She didn’t want to believe that her parents didn’t choose her, their most beloved child, Trenton, in the end.

Because the younger brother was a son?

It turned out that her parents’ love for Carrie was all fake and couldn’t be compared to gender.

Her parents never thought of handing over the family property to her!

Carrie couldn’t accept this fact.

Her parents said they were not patriarchal people.

Ever since she was little, she has had whatever she wanted.

Her brother, Trenton, wanted something and needed to do something to get it, but sometimes he still didn’t get it.

Carrie always thought that her parents’ hearts were completely biased toward her.

They would not love Camryn, and their mother just wanted Camryn to die. The person they loved most was Carrie!

Trenton looked at Carrie’s collapse, pursed his lips, and said, “Second sister, you are still young, only in your early twenties. Go out and find a job. You have to rely on yourself. No matter how capable your parents are, they can’t give it to you.

Look, how can our parents support us now? We all have to be independent and rely on ourselves. It’s better to rely on yourself than on anyone else. Find a job and do it well.”

Carrie said, “Trenton, you want me to find a job? I am the second young lady in the Newman family, and you want me to find a job? I am a rich lady. I have plenty of money. Why should I look for a job?”

What job could Carrie find? She had no work experience.

Educational qualifications... She had not graduated from college, and she no longer wanted to study, so her parents let her eat, drink, and have fun at home.

She knew nothing but spending money.

Carrie said, "Trenton, go tell Camryn and ask her to unfreeze my bank card! If you still recognize me as the second sister, tell her!"

As long as her bank card was unfrozen, she had no shortage of money to spend and didn't have to go to work at all.

How much money could she make from working?

Had she not seen what kind of jobs her two aunts do? They were cleaners and sanitation workers. They only earned a few thousand dollars a month!

Their work was so dirty, and the money was too low. Even if someone beat her to death, she would not be willing to do this type of work.
