Time flew by.

Following the conclusion of the rare-earth mine incident, the major families of Invone gradually withdrew from the delta region.

The Duncan family had orchestrated the battle for the mine. While they didn't fully realize their ambitions, they nonetheless inflicted significant harm on other powerful families, emerging as the only victor.

Oddly enough, despite their win, the Duncans didn't seize the opportunity to reclaim their territory in the delta region. Instead, they fell mysteriously silent.

Three months sped by in this peculiar tranquility.

The door to a concealed lab within the Dark Night Organization's hospital creaked open.

Following the conclusion of the rare-earth mine incident, the major families of Invone gradually withdrew from the delta region.

Oddly enough, despite their win, the Duncans didn't seize the opportunity to reclaim their territory in the delta region. Instead, they fell mysteriously silent.

Three months sped by in this peculiar tranquility.

The door to a concealed lab within the Dark Night Organization's hospital creaked open.

Liam stepped out alone. Once short, his hair now touched his shoulders. His face was scruffy, but his eyes sparkled with clarity.

After extensive experimentation, Liam had finally extracted a substance from a rainforest plant.

By blending it with existing medications in a specific ratio, he had created a drug capable of enhancing nerve repair.

Throughout this journey, Liam conducted three initial tests and two clinical trials, validating the drug's nerve repair.

Throughout this journey, Liam conducted three initial tests and two clinical trials, validating the drug's effectiveness.

Ignoring his unruly hair and unshaved face, Liam dashed to Jaxtyn's ward.

Jaxtyn remained in a vegetative state, unchanged from three months earlier. In a hurry, Liam handed a test tube containing the new medicine to a nurse, instructing her to administer it.

Next, he sprinted to the rooms of Aikin and the rest to assess their conditions.

Though Aikin was much better than Jaxtyn, his condition wasn't ideal either. Liam instructed the Dark Night Organization's team to fetch the experimental medicine from the lab for Aikin's treatment.

Once the nurses had administered the cutting-edge medication to Jaxtyn and Aikin, Liam sat solemnly in the corridor for a moment before wearily making his way to his place.

Curing neurological ailments was a slow process. Even a miraculous drug wouldn't offer instant results. Patience was needed to truly gauge its effectiveness. Liam wasn't overly anxious. He had faith in the medication he'd created. If it didn't fully heal Jaxtyn and the others, it would certainly bring some relief.

As Liam neared his residence, not far from the hospital, Fiona emerged from the shadows to confront him.

Eyeing Liam's disheveled appearance, Fiona quipped, "It's you? I almost mistook you for a cave dweller."

Liam gave her an annoyed glance and replied, "This isn't the time for jokes. What's the update?"

He was referring to the imposter posing as Julie, a matter too crucial for errors.

Fiona assured him, "All is well. She's mostly stayed in and occasionally sought information about you from our people. No outsiders have visited her during this time."

Liam nodded, then inquired, "Any updates from Riel?"

Fiona shook her head. "No news about Julie yet."

Disappointment clouded Liam's features. Despite being holed up in his lab for so long, it seemed the world outside had been uneventful.

He couldn't help but feel that when things were this quiet, something significant was bound to occur. This time, he intended to be the one pulling the strings.

Yet the absence of any news regarding Julie weighed heavily on him. His outlook on her situation was increasingly bleak.

At times, he even questioned whether the real Julie was still alive.
