

Chapter 769 The Examiner

Right after Bryan's departure, an aloof girl approached. Her demeanor was frosty as she asked, "There's no point in pretending to be strong if you're weak here. If you're concerned that your opponent might seek revenge, rest assured, he won't pass this test. My advice is to leave."

Liam shook his head. He had not been posturing as the girl suggested. Since he decided to come, he was self-assured.

While his current balancing was somewhat poor, two days of experimentation had provided him with the temporary boost he needed to confront most challenges.

Simultaneously, Liam sensed that the girl's intentions were kind rather than malicious. Her friendliness made it hard for him to decline her help.

With this in mind, Liam replied, "I appreciate your concern, miss, but I have confidence in myself. There's no need to worry about me."

Upon hearing this, the aloof girl said nothing more and turned away.

Nevertheless, deep down, she doubted Liam's words, regarding him as arrogant and unable to discern his limitations.

A short while later, a voice echoed, "Is everyone present? Headcount commences now. Those who haven't shown up will be considered automatic dropouts from the test."

Everyone was taken aback, turning their attention to the source of the voice. The examiner had materialized in the center of the scene, seemingly out of thin air.

No one had noticed his arrival, including Liam.

Although the examiner had an unremarkable appearance, Liam felt an immense pressure emanating from him. The examiner resembled the middle-aged man who had bested Liam at the Hoffmans' house but appeared even more formidable.

In that moment, Liam knew that he had come to the right place. He was certain that he would gain the strength needed from the Salvation Society to exact revenge.

The examiner verified the attendee list and led the examinees through several checkpoints.

Ahead of them stood a blue curtain.

The examiner distributed silver bracelets to each examinee, intricate in design and brimming with technology.

In a cold tone, the examiner instructed, "Put on the bracelet. Once you pass through this blue curtain, the examination will commence. If you find it too challenging and need to withdraw, simply remove your bracelet and exit the blue curtain."

Whispers and speculations filled the air. Most participants were partaking in the test for the first time and were visibly excited after receiving their bracelets.

"What do you think awaits us beyond the blue curtain?"

"I've heard it's the gravity mountain for the first challenge."

"Yes, it's the gravity mountain. I've been rigorously training for endurance every morning and night in preparation for this. I'm confident I'll pass."

"You're overestimating yourself. Do you have any idea how formidable the gravity mountain is? It's not something you can handle with just random training. Plus, the whole test isn't solely about the gravity mountain."

The discussions grew louder as some participants exuded confidence while others pondered their strategies for the forthcoming challenge.

The examiner furrowed his brow and coughed, promptly silencing the crowd.

In a stern tone, the examiner said, "I must stress that in this challenge, you can only rely on your own physical strength. No tools or equipment are allowed. If I discover anyone using auxiliary devices, your scores will be invalidated, and you will be disqualified from the examination."

Suddenly, a voice rang out from the crowd, "Sir, I want to report someone."

All eyes turned to the source of the voice, Bryan, who pointed accusingly at Liam and said, "I report that this guy wants to cheat. He brought auxiliary equipment – the crutch."
