

Chapter 762 Mission Completed

Fiona's complexion grew ghostly pale when she heard what the captain had said. She quickly glanced at the cabin where Liam was.

She realized that peaceful negotiations with the pirates were out of the question that day.

The pirates, uttering vulgar remarks and laughing maliciously, closed in on Fiona. It was at this moment that she made a firm decision.

In the next instant, Fiona took the initiative.

She didn't have a long gun; all she had were a pistol and a dagger. With a swift, purposeful movement, she darted toward Walter and fired two shots in rapid succession.

Walter's expression shifted. He was caught off guard by Fiona's unexpected attack. In a hurry, he rolled to evade the bullets.

However, his two companions behind him weren't as quick to react and were struck in the head, dropping lifeless to the deck.

However, his two companions behind him weren't as quick to react and were struck in the head, dropping lifeless to the deck.

With the tide of victory on her side, Fiona pursued the remaining pirates, swiftly approaching another two. A swing of her dagger resulted in crimson splattering across the deck.

In the blink of an eye, Fiona had killed four pirates.

But the rest of the pirates regained their senses. As they were armed with long guns, their firepower far surpassed hers.

She had no choice but to take cover and engage them in a difficult battle.

After she managed to eliminate a few more pirates, Fiona's pistol ran out of ammunition.

Walter signaled his crew to lower their weapons and jeered, "What a fierce woman. I like you. Today, I must see just how capable you are."

Walter advanced, wielding his whip, which Fiona deftly blocked with her hands guarding her chest.

In terms of sheer strength, Walter and Fiona were evenly matched, but the numbers were against her.

Fighting Walter meant constantly being on guard against sneak attacks from the other pirates, making the battle increasingly difficult.

Fiona's strength waned quickly, and her body bore numerous injuries.

Seeing Fiona's exhaustion, Walter chuckled arrogantly. "You're quite something, sweetie. Don't fret, I won't kill you. You can be my wife from now on. Ha! Ha!"

Ignoring Walter, Fiona assessed her surroundings and, after a fierce struggle, managed to move to a part of the deck far from Liam's cabin.

With a bitter smile, she kicked Walter, creating some distance between them.

Fiona knew she'd lose if she continued fighting. She had only one option left.

She pulled out the bomb she'd been carrying since her mission with Aikin and others. Originally intended to cover Liam's escape, it now had a different purpose.

Little did she anticipate that it would find use in this moment.

Tears flowed down Fiona's face as she mourned the end of her mission.

"King, you have to rely on yourself in the future," Fiona murmured. "You must stay alive."

She then triggered the bomb without hesitation.

The explosion consumed the entire deck, masking all other sounds.

The force of the explosion was staggering, causing significant damage to the cruise ship and rendering it uncontrollable.

With many reefs in the vicinity, the cruise ship swiftly collided with one.

The sea water flooded in, and the ship began to sink rapidly.

Liam, confined to his cabin, remained unaware of the chaos outside. He deduced from the intense gunfire that Fiona was in grave danger. Just as he contemplated how to assist her, the explosion resonated.

Tears streamed down Liam's face as the ship shook. He recognized the sound of the explosion, similar to the power wielded by Riel and his companions.

He knew that Fiona was now gone forever.

Overwhelmed by sorrow, Liam became numb, his

Then the world spun, and the sea water inundated the ship, swallowing him up.
