Upon entering the red curtain, Liam witnessed an abrupt transformation in the scene before him.

It revealed a gruesome tableau of lifeless bodies and bloodshed. A group of intruders had infiltrated Genesis Island with vengeance in their hearts.

In the outskirts, these uninvited guests were ruthlessly slaughtering the inhabitants, and some had even broken into the island's central region.

But their presence was swiftly detected by the Salvation Society members, who took control of them, including the nuclear fusion explosives strapped to them.

With the Salvation Society members' intervention, the attackers were swiftly overpowered. However, these troublesome outsiders had taken an innocent child hostage, leading to a tense standoff with the Salvation Society members.

The leader of the outsiders demanded, "Detonate the nuclear fusion explosives you've got from us, or I will kill this child."

In that moment, the Salvation Society members engaged in a heated debate among themselves. Some were in favor of saving the child, while others were inclined to give up. Most leaned towards the latter.

Liam had been watching all this happen as an onlooker, but a sudden message entered his mind. "Please make a decision. A, abandon the child. B, trigger the explosives. Be cautious, as your choice will impact the ultimate outcome. Make your decision carefully."

Liam furrowed his brow. In reality, he wouldn't opt for either of these two choices. He would look for a way to save the child without triggering the explosives.

However, in this constrained world, he was immobilized and unable to communicate with those on the field. This was purely a test of his decision-making.

Without too much hesitation, Liam made his choice. "I choose A."

Though he couldn't bear it, Liam reluctantly reasoned that he had to save more lives.

He consoled himself, reminding that this was only a test.

As soon as Liam made his decision, the scenario continued based on his choice. The Salvation Society members triumphed over the outsiders, but the child did not survive.

With the child's demise, all the scenes vanished, and darkness enveloped Liam's vision.

"The test is over."

With a heavy heart, Liam exited the red curtain. The examiner promptly approached and congratulated him.

"Well done. I didn't misjudge you. In the final challenge, you demonstrated rational decision-making. Congratulations, you've passed all the tests. Welcome to the Salvation Society."

Liam breathed a sigh of relief. He had persevered and achieved his aspiration of joining the Salvation Society.

Time passed swiftly. Following the test's conclusion, Liam diligently honed his skills within the Salvation Society.

In fact, by the end of the first year, Liam had the power to seek vengeance. However, new members were prohibited from leaving Genesis Island for a decade, so he refrained from returning to Invone for retribution.

During this period, Emmeline frequently visited Liam, and he gradually developed affection for her.

As time passed, the two married and had a child.

The third year came to an end.

By now, Liam had established a strong position within the Salvation Society and enjoyed a prominent status.

One day, he arranged to meet Emmeline. They planned to have dinner after his training.

They agreed to convene at 6:00 in the evening, but Liam waited at the restaurant until 8:00, with no sign of Emmeline.

Suddenly, he received an urgent message – emergency assembly order number one from the Salvation Society: "The outskirts of Genesis Island have been invaded by intruders. Proceed to the perimeter immediately upon receiving this order."

A sense of foreboding gripped Liam. The marked location in the message was around his home. Emmeline hadn't shown up. It was highly likely something had gone wrong.

With these concerns in mind, Liam hastened to the periphery of Genesis Island. As he witnessed the chaotic scene before him, a sense of déjà vu washed over him.

Many Salvation Society members had arrived first and were engaged in a battle against the intruders. The situation seemed to favor the Salvation Society members.

Just as Liam was about to join the fray, a familiar figure rushed into his arms.

It was Emmeline. She clung to Liam tightly and sobbed, "Liam, our... Our child has been taken hostage."
