“Well, you wouldn’t have taken the time to play with Joey if you didn’t like kids, right?” asked Annie.

“Oh, I’m only doing it to help you. You looked kind of tired taking care of him,” answered Aaron.

Annie was stunned, and her heart actually skipped a beat.

‘He’s only doing this to help me... No, Annie! Don’t overthink this. I shouldn’t take the words of a serial flirter seriously.’

She shook her head to clear her mind. “Thanks for helping, but I still think you must’ve liked kids.

Otherwise, you’ll find the whole thing annoying after five minutes. Just like my ex. He hates kids so much that he’d growl at any kid who comes near him.”

Aaron narrowed his eyes at the mention of Annie’s ex.

“Then why did you choose to be with him?” he asked with a smirk.

Annie sighed and said sadly, “He actually treats me quite well, so I thought he’d change after we have kids of our own. But then I found out it was all an act. He just wanted to use me to get close to Uncle Jeremy’s family.”

Aaron used Joey’s chubby little finger to poke Annie’s face, causing her to smile shyly.

“There, there. It’s all in the past now. Plus, it’s your ex’s loss for not knowing a good thing when he had it. So cheer up, buttercup.”

‘Does he mean I’m the good thing?’ thought Annie with shock. ‘Then why doesn’t he like me? He might as well not say things like that since it’s making me more confused than ever.’

At that moment, Annie’s phone suddenly rang.

“Hey, Marcus. What’s up?” she asked after she answered the call.

“Hey, Annie... Are you still with Mister Aaron and Miss Xante?” Marcus asked gently and shyly. “It’s already lunchtime, so I was wondering whether you need me to help you order some food delivery... I’m actually quite worried you’ll pass out from hunger.”

Annie was both touched and embarrassed by Marcus’ concern. “Oh, there’s no need. I’m at my uncle’s house right now, and we’re going to have lunch soon.”

“Your uncle’s house? Does that mean Mister Aaron and Miss Xante are there too?”

Annie knew she had to keep Aaron’s and Xante’s whereabouts a secret, so she lied, “Nope, they’re not here. I came to my uncle’s house alone after finishing my work.”

She decided to leave it at that as she did not want her colleagues to find out she was the niece of Jeremy Holden. Previously, when everyone at Holden Group found out who she was, they would either flatter her excessively or ask her for gossip about Jeremy. It was very annoying to say the least.

To his credit, Marcus did not ask any more questions.

Instead, he asked shyly, “Then are you free tonight? If you are, would you like to go to the cinema with me? There’s a new movie I’ve been meaning to see.”

“Oh, a new movie came out? I didn’t even know.”

“I’ll text you the movie details later. We can go watch it together tonight if you’re interested.”

“Okay, sure. I’ll wait for your text then.”

Annie immediately received a text from Marcus after she hung up the phone.

It was a picture of an all-black movie poster with only the word ‘Curse’ in red blood color.

“Hey, it’s a horror movie,” said Aaron near her suddenly.

Annie quickly looked up and saw Aaron was looking at her phone too. She instinctively put her phone away and scolded him.

“Mister Aaron, you should really stop snooping on other people’s phones.”

Chapter 1140

Aaron simply ignored Annie's comment and said, "Tsk! He should be working instead of texting you! I need to talk to his supervisor about his work ethic."

Fearing Marcus would get into trouble, Annie quickly said, "He called me during lunch break, so there's nothing wrong with his work ethic!"

"Didn't he text you before lunch break as well?" asked Aaron sternly.

"Umm... He needed to ask me something about work. It was only for a few minutes!"

Aaron narrowed his eyes suspiciously. "You sure are protective of him. Does that mean you'll go on a movie date with him?"

Annie looked unsure. "I'm still thinking about it," she said flatly. "I'm not interested in horror movies. Plus, what if I screamed too loud in front of him? That'll be so embarrassing."

Aaron smirked. "Why don't you go with me, then? I'm looking forward to seeing you scream."

Annie was stunned. She thought she heard wrong. "Mister Aaron, are you asking me to watch a movie with you?"

Aaron nodded confidently. "Yeah. You can hug me if you're scared. I don't mind being taken advantage of by you."

Annie's lips twitched. "Your joke isn't funny at all."

She hated how he would flirt with every chance he got; it was making it very hard for her to get over him. 'Ugh! Why does he have to be so hot? No, Annie! This won't do. You can't continue being like this.'

She quickly took Joey away from Aaron. "Thank you, Mister Aaron, for helping me with Joey. But I'm hungry now, so we're going to head in to see whether lunch is ready."

After that, she started making her way back to the mansion.

Aaron trotted after her and asked persistently, "So do you want to watch a movie with me?"

"No! I do not!" Annie's heartbeat sped up as did her pace. She could not stand being played around by Aaron anymore.

Lunch was already ready by the time Annie got back to the mansion.

“You came just at the right time, Annie. I was about to ask the servant to call you in. Here, take a seat. I hope you’ll find the food to your liking,” said Pamela kindly.

“I’m sure it will,” said Annie politely before sitting next to Corinne with Joey still in her arms.

The moment Joey saw Corinne, he reached out his chubby hands to get her to carry him.

Corinne smoothly took him off Annie’s hands. Even though the two of them were not related by blood, she knew how much he needed her, so she gave in to his request.

Annie, Aaron, and Xante were not the only guests there as the servants had asked Francine and Chester to join the others for lunch too. Thus, it was quite lively, to say the least. Greg did not care for the noise, so he asked the servants to bring his lunch to his room.

Pamela sat at the head of the table, and throughout the whole lunch, she would politely encourage everyone to eat more while piling food on Corinne’s plate.

Even so, Corinne did not eat much since she fed most of the food to Joey. Seeing this, Pamela offered to take care of Joey so that Corinne could eat in peace, but Joey would not let anyone else feed him. Thus, Pamela had no choice but to give up and let Corinne feed him.
