

Chapter 948 The Test

In the days that followed, Trevor stayed at the secluded farm, training secretly.

The temperature was getting lower day by day, and it had become more challenging for him.

Today, it started snowing. The entire farm was covered by snow.

"It's been three months," Trevor murmured, standing at the door of the warehouse. He couldn't hide the excitement on his face.

He almost lost track of time. Before he could know it, he had already been doing closed training for three months.

This secluded farm gave him the opportunity to experience all kinds of unimaginable training.

Breaking through those traps was just the initial test.

In the process of learning martial arts, he experienced much more incredible training that helped him hone his combat effectiveness.

He had experienced sitting under the cold and powerful waterfall for yoga meditation, stabbing small flying insects with toothpicks, and even bathing with strange herbs.

And these strenuous training exercises added more wounds to his body. Every time the old wounds were about to heal, new wounds would come out.

The deep-rooted hatred in his heart was Trevor's motivation. Every time he felt pain from the training, he would only grit his teeth and persist.

After wandering on the edge of life and death several times, his hard work paid off. He finally gained powerful strength.

The three months of training were enough for him to master the skills of breaking through the traps unscathed.

Also, his movements became smoother, lighter, and more agile, just like what Pearce had shown him before.

"Well done, Trevor," Pearce complimented, sitting in the corner of the warehouse and slowly making tea. "But with your current strength, I'm afraid you will still find it difficult to fight against those men in black."

Trevor was slightly shocked. All this time, he focused on training, enduring the difficulties and pain. He suppressed the urge to investigate the truth, so he thought he kept his secret well. He did not expect that Pearce would expose him.

He didn't say anything, so Pearce continued, "Trevor, you are a very talented man. But sadly, some things cannot be changed by talent alone. If you face one of those men in black, you may not be at a disadvantage with your current strength. However, these men are a group of people with guns. Being impulsive is tantamount to courting death."

Upon hearing this, Trevor gritted his teeth. Then he said sincerely, "Master, please teach me more."

But much to his surprise, Pearce shook his head.

"It's not that I don't want to teach you. However, your body condition now can't handle more training. You've exhausted your body in the past three months. For a normal person, the training you've completed in three months should actually take two to three years. I know how eager you are to take revenge. But you are not prepared yet. Your physical condition can't support higher-intensity training now. It may not be visible on the surface. Even with the use of modern medical technology, doctors may not find out any disease in you. But the truth is, there are many hidden dangers in your body. They may come out anytime."

Trevor got anxious at once. "But I need to learn more. I still have a mission to avenge my father and grandfather, as well as my friend. I don't know if they are still alive. But if they are, they must be in danger."

Pearce was silent for a while. Then he sighed and said, "Okay, I will arrange a test for you tonight. If you pass, you are free to go out and investigate. But if you fail, you have to stay here and recuperate."

Trevor's eyes narrowed as he fell into deep thought.

The test Pearce would prepare must not be that simple. After all, it would determine if he could proceed with his revenge.

He must prepare for it. He needed to raise his spirits to deal with it.

Trevor took a few deep breaths to calm himself down. Then he said sincerely, "Master, thank you."

Actually, Pearce was doing this for Trevor's own good. He cared about Trevor's safety.

He pretended to be annoyed, glared at Trevor, and said, "Don't flatter me. Remember, if you don't pass the test, you can't go anywhere."
