

Chapter 1625 Reveal The Truth

"You..." Janet's face turned red with anger. Just as she was about to say something, Brandon gently squeezed her hand beneath the table to comfort her.

Confused, Janet met Brandon's gaze, finding his expression gentle and reassuring.

Then, Sean stepped forward to take control of the situation and announced, "Ladies and gentlemen, please hold your questions for a moment. Before Mr. Larson provides any responses, there's some evidence that needs to be presented first."

"What evidence? Don't waste our time! Larson Group has a notorious reputation now!" one reporter yelled from the crowd.

This sparked a wave of murmurs among the reporters. "Larson Group has been involved in so many bad things, and we're all aware of it. How does Mr. Larson plan to deny this accusation?"

"Let's wait and see how Larson Group and Brandon will defend themselves."

Turning to the reporters offstage, Brandon said, "This press conference is for Larson Group. If you're not interested in hearing what we have to say, please get out."

Immediately, the room fell silent.

Despite their reluctance to be quiet, the journalists instinctively fell silent, given the authority that Brandon and Larson Group wielded.

After gaining control of the scene, Brandon signaled to Sean, who was adequately-prepared, to play the evidence they had discovered on a big screen on the wall of the hall.

Right away, the DNA identification and death certificate of the alleged victim supposedly killed by Brandon appeared on the screen. The enlarged words were clearly visible to everyone present.

The clicking sounds of the cameras mingled with chatter from the onlookers.

The screen was filled with evidence. It became clear to everyone that the person that had died was, in fact, not Jeremy. They had been poisoned and subsequently burned.

"It's nothing like what the rumors had alleged!"

A man's voice suddenly rang out from the audience.

The hall was soon filled with buzzing discussions as people exchanged their thoughts and opinions.

"It appears someone intentionally spread the rumor. Could it be a competitor of Larson Group?"

"It's hard to say. Only time will tell. It could be a fabricated story by Larson Group. Capitalists like Brandon can be quite sly and cunning." The reporters refrained from making further comments.

Many people who held Brandon and Larson Group in high regard immediately changed their minds, condemning the media for defaming Brandon without knowing the whole truth.

"It truly baffles me that reporters nowadays spread rumors before they obtain concrete evidence. What sets them apart from all those online slanderers, then?"

"Exactly! What's more, Larson Group's stock took a complete nosedive at the opening of the stock market several days in a row. If the company weren't so well-funded, it might have gone bankrupt, given its size."

Noticing that many people were still rational, Janet breathed a sigh of relief. She discreetly pinched Brandon's fingers and remarked playfully, "You look quite confident."

With a smile, Brandon responded firmly, "I always act with conviction."

"It seems like you have another plan in mind." Janet was looking forward to it. She had surmised that Brandon, in the face of the harsh words from the reporters, would undoubtedly strike back.

"You're so smart," Brandon replied. Hearing the curses coming from the crowd, he raised his eyebrows and glanced at Sean, signaling to him to continue presenting the evidence.
