

Chapter 1638 Physical Problem

Janet furrowed her brow, concerned about the sudden issue with her health. She had been feeling fine lately, so the unexpected news was troubling.

Johanna, on the other hand, was growing increasingly frustrated. She addressed the doctor sternly, "Are you suggesting that we should leave and wait? Do you realize how valuable our time is?"

Seeing Johanna's irritation, the doctor quickly offered an apology. "We are equally surprised by these results. Regrettably, at this point, our only option is to ask you to return home and await further updates."

Despite her frustration, Johanna opted to restrain herself as she addressed the doctor's concerns. "I strongly recommend a reevaluation of the examination results. My daughter underwent previous check-ups with Dr. Frank Watson, a renowned physician, who confirmed her excellent health. However, you indicated a health issue."

A few days ago, Janet had undergone a comprehensive check-up at Frank's private hospital. Frank, a well-known physician, had assured her that she was in good health and didn't require any medication.

The doctor had an awkward smile on his face as he explained, "Our hospital's expertise may not be as comprehensive as Dr. Watson's. While he is undoubtedly renowned, our facility lives up to its meticulous one-on-one care and rigorous assessment procedures. We consider numerous factors to provide the most accurate diagnosis."

Janet appreciated the doctor's perspective. She recognized the importance of a thorough evaluation to ensure her well-being, rather than rushing into medication for financial reasons, which would be a grave disservice to the patient's health.

"It's alright, Mom. We can afford to wait. The doctor knows better," Janet said as she gently squeezed Johanna's hand.

Seeing Janet's compromise, Johanna let out a sigh of relief and didn't press the doctor further. She acknowledged that the hospital's adherence to their meticulous procedures was indeed in the best interest of the patients.

In a low voice, the doctor continued to persuade Johanna. "Ms. White, to express our apologies for any inconvenience caused, how about we offer you a ten percent discount? We deeply regret the delay."

Johanna's reputation in Barnes was well-known, and the doctor hoped the gesture would help smooth things over.

"Do you think I care about this small discount? Ten percent off? Are you aware of how much we earn daily from our entertainment company?"

Johanna shot a cold glance at the doctor, her frustration evident. She swiftly quelled the irritation inside her and walked out with Janet.

Outside the hospital, Johanna lost her temper. "What kind of hospital is this? I'll have a word with Beal when we get back. That old man is becoming more and more neglectful. He doesn't even take his daughter's matters seriously anymore."

Janet's spirits were relatively unscathed. She consoled Johanna, saying, "Don't trouble Dad over this. This hospital is reputable. If there is indeed an issue with my health, it's better to discover it now so that I can receive prompt treatment."

Johanna cast a glance at Janet, unable to stay angry with her. Her daughter was compliant and sensible, which brought her comfort. "I'll let that old man off for your sake!"

Seeing Johanna's improved mood, Janet felt relieved. She thought of the earlier post and proposed, "Laney has returned to Barnes. Mom, would you accompany me to visit her?"

Johanna immediately grasped Janet's intentions. "You want to see her daughter, don't you?"

Janet blushed and cautioned, "Don't say that in front of Laney. She might get jealous."

"It's your call, my dear daughter!" Johanna smiled warmly and affectionately. As long as Janet was happy, Johanna felt like the happiest woman in the world.