

The Princess and the Pauper (Arabella)

Chapter 891

Chapter 891

"Did Carol ever show up in the end?" Arabella asked again.

"No, that kid hasn't answered any of our messages since she found her biological parents. We were worried she'd come running if she saw that we were hurt but thank God she didn't."

Logan exhaled deeply, preferring to be in danger himself rather than have his daughter involved.

"They left after three days?"

"It seems they received an important call and didn't untie us before they left. We hadn't eaten for three days. Although the wounds weren't that deep, they were untreated, and we both ended up with fever. It took a couple of days for us to recover at home."

Arabella understood. No wonder the neighbors said that Mr. and Mrs. Earwood didn't open their door until four or five days later.

"Did they leave any message behind?" Arabella kept on enquiring.

"They just warned us to keep our mouths shut if we didn't want anything bad to happen to Carol. They threatened that the whole town would suffer if we opened our mouth."

On hearing that, Clark asked, "Were those guys good with their hands, like they've had special training?"

Logan nodded in agreement and said, "They didn't seem like ordinary people."

At first, they thought they were dealing with street thugs, but they soon realized they were not ordinary hoodlums.

"So, you figured Carol was in danger and wanted to find her?"

Arabella asked again.

"Yes,' Logan nodded, "But what we didn't expect was that we've been in Lidaria for almost three months and there's been no news.

Plus, we've noticed some strange things."

"What things?" Arabella and Clark asked in unison.

"When we come home from our tutoring jobs, we always feel like things in the house have been moved."

Upon hearing that, Arabella had a very bad feeling, "You mean, someone's been here?"

"Stop talking; Arabella immediately stood up, turned off all the lights in the house, took out a detector from her bag, and scanned the entire living room. She found six cameras and four bugs.

They'd probably been filmed from the moment they stepped into the living room.

Arabella began to dismantle the hidden cameras in the wall sockets, the miniature cameras in the screw holes, and so on.

Taylor was frightened and took refuge in her husband's arms, watching the girl's actions in disbelief.

She couldn't believe that those seemingly insignificant items were actually "eyes" that were watching their every move.

Logan realized suddenly that those siblings were not ordinary people either. After all, they carried such detection devices with them at all times and the girl's calm demeanor was far from that of an ordinary high school student!

Who were they? What was their identity!

Seeing the girl dismantle and destroy everything, Taylor couldn't help but ask, "Kid, are you sure these things are cameras and bugs?"
