

Arabella 1558

Chapter 1558

Many were gobsmacked by her move.

Holy smokes, she must be new, right? To actually sit next to Romeo.

Didn't everyone know Romeo hates being disturbed at lunchtime?

Though they weren't dining at the same table, her seat was just to the left of Romeo, barely half a yard away.

Romeo didn't like people getting close. Especially women with nervous dining habits, he could tell right away what she was after.

Lena felt Romeo's gaze and thought she had caught the attention of the formidable CEO. She ducked her head, pretending to spill soup on her blouse, then turned and asked politely, "Excuse me, do you happen to have a napkin? I've accidentally stained my clothes."

Romeo's eyes fell on her, seeing right through her little ruse.

"Are you new here? I haven't seen you around before. Hi, I'm Lena from the admin department. Which department are you in?"

That's when Arabella returned, taking her seat on Romeo's right. His tone softened structure, the company's main business, the flustered by the sudden appearance of this commanding woman,

"My wife," Romeo introduced.

face was beyond

Romeo

could she not have known Mr. McMillian was already on your work in words, Lena replied ashamedly, "Yes, Mrs.

stood up, ready to carry her tray away, when Arabella bit warm here, I'll eat

wife to have such a strong with a half-smile, unimpressed, "What are you unable to hold back a chuckle, continued to serve her,

"You seem to find it amusing?"

"Did you scare her off knowing I was going to fire her, just to save her job?" Romeo knew his young wife's intentions all too well.

"She's young. It's normal to have fantasies."

"You say that as if," Romeo teased, gently flicking her nose, "you're not young yourself?"

"A good employee is worth keeping."

"And how do you know she's a good employee?"

"Isn't that what you said? That this subsidiary is doing quite well, and the staff are enthusiastic."

Romeo looked at her with indulgent affection, surprised she remembered his words.

The staff were stunned by this scene, not expecting the private side of Romeo to be like this!