Chapter 321

Just as Attlee was about to speak, he was cut off by her angry roar: "All of you, get out!"

Olga wasn't satisfied and angrily questioned her, "Are you not showing your money now because you want to leave it to Arabella?"

"Who I want to leave my money to is my business, none of yours! If you don't leave, I'll call for help!"

Seeing Grace's explosive temper and her incessant cough, Attlee quickly dragged Olga out of the room.

"Don't yell at her, if you annoy her to the point of something bad happening, we won't get a single thing!"

"How's that possible?" A vicious glint flashed in Olga's eyes. "Isn't it right and lawful for you, her only son, to inherit her wealth after Grace passes away?"

"Hello, Ms. Bennett, I'm the editor-in-chief of International Fashion Magazine."

As Arabella listened to them introduce themselves, before she could even refuse, Dean appeared.

"Ms. Bennett, I heard you were here; I have something urgent. Who are these people?" Dean looked at the group in confusion.

The people present were also taken aback, simultaneously asking, "Ms. Bennett?"

Wasn't she Designer Molly's assistant?

Why did it sound like she's someone important?

When Attlee dropped that bombshell, Dean was taken aback. Was he Arabella's dad?

What the heck was going on?

Arabella's real dad was supposed to be Kenneth Collins!

Who was this guy?

He had the nerve to claim he was Arabella's father.

Without batting an eyelid, Arabella headed toward the company. Attlee quickly tried to stop her.

"Bella, I got you this chocolate cake on my way here. I bought it from that popular dessert shop that you probably know. I stood in line myself to buy it."

"Now that you're the company manager, you can get Designer Molly to whip up some new designs for us, free of charge. Then, our two companies can team up for sales. If you don't fancy teaming up, we can sell them separately."

Arabella was annoyed.

Teamed up for sales, which meant partnering up with the Murphy family's company to boost their fame.

If they sold separately, all the cash would flow straight into their pockets.

Design styles for them to make money, for free? Even a sane person wouldn't say something like that.

"Dean, call security and tell them there's a lunatic babbling nonsense here."

"Arabella, how could you be so heartless?" Attlee spat out angrily, "You've lived with the Murphy family for eighteen years; all the money you spent was ours; did I ever ask for a penny back? I just want you to contribute a bit; I'm not asking you to fork out all your cash. Why are you so against it?"

The moment Arabella heard the news, she was on her feet and out the door, asking, "What's up?"

"Something might have rattled her."

Arabella immediately had an inkling: "Did anyone from the Murphy family go to the hospital?"

"A nurse told me that she saw someone from the Murphy family leaving Grace's room before she fell ill."

This could mean that Grace was pissed off by the Murphy family.

If that's the case, she won't let them off the hook!

With her company, Grace's mood got a little better, but she still felt bummed about losing her stuff.

That gem flower must have taken Bella a heck of a long time to find those high-grade gems.

That new phone, though it didn't look branded, Grace knew that the operating system inside was sleek, and it must've cost a pretty penny.

And that bracelet, made of high-quality gold, must've been designed by Bella herself; she really loved it.

"I see! Don't worry! You are Dr. Caden's girlfriend, and you are one of our own!"

"No, don't say I said it! Please, please!" The nurse put her hands together and asked again and again.

At this time, Caden walked out of the office and saw Arabella leaving. He walked toward her with long legs.

When the nurse saw him, she picked up a medical record and pretended to be reading it, but she turned it upside down.

"Arabella." Caden stopped her aloud. "Are you going back?"

“Well, you should be more gentle in the future.”

Caden thought that he was not gentle enough at ordinary times

In front of Arabella, his temper has never been better!

Did the nurse speak ill of him?

Otherwise, why would Arabella suddenly say this to him?

In this way, Caden’s eyes fell on the nurse, and the nurse’s hands with medical records were shaking with fear.

“I mean, you seem to be too serious at ordinary times. Smile more.”

It was clear that Attlee respected Arabella quite a bit, even with a hint of deliberate flattery.

The two maids didn't understand what was going on, felt a bit unconvinced, and were about to pick up the clothes and go indoors.

Arabella said coldly, "Get someone else to do it, I don't like their hands."

"You!" The two maids were so angry they were speechless.

Attlee, however, obeyed and quickly called for someone else to handle it.

The butler at the side couldn't help but snort. She still remembered the last incident. Before Arabella left the Murphy family, she stole Yoli's gem necklace. When she got busted, she panicked and tossed the necklace into the trash bin.

"Well, that settles it then, Arabella said, about to enter the house.

Upon hearing this, Attlee mistook it for Arabella's refusal to cooperate. He hastily nudged Olga: "What are you waiting for? It's her Grandma's stuff. If she wants it now, let her have it!"

"Why should I?" Olga knew the stuff was worth a fortune. She could sell it for a ton of cash—definitely more than what Arabella's order was worth!

"You've got to have a big picture in mind!" Attlee reminded her in a hushed, urgent voice, "Go get it now!"

The Collins family had made it clear that they wouldn't allow any company to cooperate with them. If Arabella's subsidiary could be the first to approach them, other companies would surely follow suit, thinking they'd established a good rapport with the Collins.

Plus, they would ed Arabella to get Designer Molly to design new models for free in the future.

"It's hurt. Don't touch me. Arabella, you have become so savage after a few days of not disciplining you?"

Olga was lying on the grass, and tears came out in pain. "Arabella, you have gone too far!" Yolanda saw Arabella want to go, immediately caught up with her, grabbed her arm, and wanted to argue with her clearly. Arabella hated Yolanda's touch. As soon as she raised her hand, Yolanda fell dramatically on the grass with a painful expression.

"Yoli, are you all right?" One of the servants hurriedly came forward to help.

Yolanda's tears fell, but she pretended to be strong and said, "I'm fine. Don't worry."

"Bella, how can you treat your mother and sister like this?" Attlee can't believe that this little girl had become so savage. She was not only rude to the servants but also so indifferent to her mother and sister.

He can't believe she's like this!

"You said it yourself that I have nothing to do with this family." Arabella's eyes were ruthless. "If I catch you stealing from Grandma again, I'll cut off your hands!"

"You, you wicked girl, don't let her go!" Olga was in tears and ordered the servants around her to "close the door and teach her a good lesson!"

Arabella easily opened a road and swaggered out of the Murphy family.

The Murphy family was shocked. Is this still the old Bella? She's only been away for a month, and she's changed so much.
