“How dare you speak to me like this!”

Overhearing their heated exchange from the living room, Valery couldn't resist fanning the flames.

“Sis, how could you talk to Dad like that? He's made sacrifices for this family too!”

A sarcastic grin tugged at Hannah's lips.

“Squandering hundreds of millions in just a few years is a remarkable feat of incompetence.

Thankfully, I inherited my mother's wits. Otherwise, if I ended up as clueless as you, Valery, I'd prefer to be dead.”

Valery's expression darkened at Hannah's sarcastic words.

“Dad, do you see this? You told me to be nice to her, and listen to what she's saying!”

Furious, Wyatt lifted his hand as if to strike Hannah.

“Disrespectful! We've taken care of you all these years, and this is how you repay us?”

Hannah caught Wyatt's wrist and pushed him away.

“And what about your own ingratitude? Grandpa has supported you for ages. Need I remind you how you betrayed my mother while she was still alive? The White family has been funding you, not the other way around. Have you ever spent a cent of that three hundred million on me?”

Wyatt's face flushed crimson at Hannah's retort.

Julissa stepped in, trying to mediate.

“Your father didn't use that money just for himself. The Moore family needed it for the business.

He always intended to give it to you once things stabilized.”

“Stabilized?” Hannah scoffed.

“The way he runs Moore Group, even another billion wouldn't last. You sure know how to make excuses for him.”

With that, Hannah ascended the stairs, swiftly packed her belongings, and returned downstairs.

Wyatt, sitting in the living room, saw her heading for the door and yelled, “If you walk out now, don't ever think of coming back! You are no longer my daughter of the Moore family!”

“Perfect,” Hannah retorted.

“I've always been ashamed to call you my father. Let's make it official and sever all ties.”

Hannah checked into a hotel, suitcase in tow.

No sooner had she set her luggage down than her phone buzzed. An unfamiliar number flashed on the screen.
