The group started walking. Thea got next to Alessia and put her hand on her arm to slow her down. When they were behind the group, Thea whispered so only Alessia could hear.

“That girl from Crescent Moon, do you recognize her?”

“I don’t recognize her as an omega or slave,” Alessia whispered back.

“I get the feeling she’s a spy,” Thea said. “Any thoughts on that?”

“It would make sense.”

“What do you think we should do with her?”

“Ask if she wants to defect for real or go back empty-handed?”

Thea nodded. She jogged up next to the girl.

“Hey, what would your Alpha say if he knew you were defecting?” Thea said to her.

“He’d probably kill me,” she said.

“Do you have family back in Crescent Moon?” Thea said.

“Yes.”

“Why did you leave them there?”

“They wanted to stay.”

“But they were okay with you leaving?”

“I guess,” the girls said, her arms fidgeting.

“What are your parents’ ranks?”

“We’re omegas.”

Thea didn’t need Alessia to confirm it was a lie. She could feel it. She could also feel the disgust the girl felt when she said it. 1

“You’ve had it pretty rough, huh?” Thea said.

“Yeah.”

“I heard Crescent Moon treats their omegas and slaves the worst out of anyone. The people in power get off on abusing them. Shameless psychopaths, afraid of fighting people who could actually take them.”

Thea felt the girl’s response. She was offended that Thea was portraying her as weak, but she did like abusing the slaves and omegas. She got off on it. 1

“Yeah, it’s terrible over there,” the girl said, teeth clenched.

“Right,” Thea said. “You know, Alessia over there used to be in Crescent Moon. When she came to us, she was starved, just skin and bones. Now look at her. She’s bigger than you. I bet she could take me on in a few more weeks.”

The girl looked at Alessia, offended and confused. Alessia was bigger than her, but Alessia was an omega, and she was the daughter of warriors. How could an omega be stronger than a warrior?

“You’re confused, I see,” Thea said. “You must know Crescent Moon starves its omegas and slaves to keep them weak so they can’t fight back.”

The girl got more confused.

They were approaching New Dawn’s gates.

“Let’s stop for a second, guys.” Everyone halted and looked at Thea. “Thing is, I can’t let you on New Dawn land.”

The other refugees looked scared.

“Why not?” the girl said.

“You’re not an omega,” Thea said. “You’re a spy,

aren't you?"

The girl didn't say anything.

"Were you going to sneak information to someone at school each day?" Thea said. "Or gather what you could and go back to Crescent Moon? You weren't going to hurt any of your former pack mates, were you?"

The girl's eyes darted around, looking for an escape.

"That's disappointing," Thea said. "What do you think we should do with you? Someone who wants to hurt my pack."

"If my Alpha were in your position, he'd kill me," she said.

"Do you want that?" Thea said.

"No."

"Your Alpha sent you, right? What did he want you to do?"

"He wanted me to see who was here."

Thea could sense she was telling the truth this time.

"You guys don't know what pack members are missing?" Thea said.

“I don’t know.”

“Your parents are warriors, yes?”

“Yes.”

“You’re young enough that you may not know what you’re doing, so I’m not going to kill you. I’m not going to take you prisoner because I don’t want you on my land. Unless you’re planning on changing your beliefs? I didn’t think so. Tell your Alpha to stop abusing pack members, and maybe they won’t leave his pack. You better go before I change my mind.”

The girl ran toward the school.

“Sorry about that, guys,” Thea said to the refugees. “Let’s go.”

Thea, the triplets, Lizzy, Alessia, and Misty led the refugees past New Dawn’s gates and to the pack house.

Ellie, one of the pack house employees, came up to Thea.

“Luna,” Ellie said in a meek voice. “I have a package for you. Do you want to take it now?”

“Yes, thank you, Ellie,” Thea said.

Ellie handed a box to her and left. Thea gave the box to Alessia.

“Your phone,” Thea said.

“That was fast,” Alessia said. “Thank you.”

“Text me when you get it set up, so I have the number,” Thea said.

Alessia nodded. She had Thea’s number memorized from giving it out to people who needed help.

When they showed the new refugees their rooms, Arella, Ophelia, and Cassandra ran up to Thea.

“Can we go for a ride?” Arella said.

“Hold on one second,” Thea said to the girls. She turned back to the refugees. “Get settled in. Go to pack training. We’ll see you at pack dinner tonight.”

The refugees nodded.

“Luna, Alphas, Alpha Sharpe is at the gates,” one of the guards at the gate mind linked them.

“Send him through,” Alaric said over mind link. “Dad, Alpha Sharpe is here. Meet us at the apothecary?”

“Be there soon,” Alpha Ulric said over mind link.

Thea turned back to the girls.

“How did reading class go?” Thea said.

“I liked it,” Ophelia said.

“We’ve never done anything like that. There were so many people,” Cassandra said.

“What did you learn?” Thea said.

“We learned the Alphabet Song,” Arella said. “And what the letters look like, and what sounds they make.”

“We had to draw them too,” Cassandra said.

“We learned how to hold a pencil,” Ophelia said. “We traced all the letters.”

“How do you hold a pencil?” Thea said. The girls showed her. “That looks really good. I think you earned a ride today. We need to take care of one thing first, but you can come. Let’s go.”

The girls jumped up and down, smiling.

Misty, Thea, the triplets, and the three girls went to the apothecary shop. Alpha Ulric, Alpha Sharpe, and his apothecary were already there.

“Hey, Dad,” Misty said.

“Pumpkin,” Alpha Sharpe said. He held his arms open, and Misty hugged him. He kept one arm around her. “I brought my parents and a few of their friends to talk to your men.”

Thea noticed the older people sitting in the corner of the apothecary shop.

“Thank you, Alpha Sharpe,” Thea said. “Let me call in the men.” Thea mind linked Delta team. “Hey, Alpha Sharpe brought people who might know things about Crescent Moon and the Alpha line. We’re in the apothecary shop. Who wants to talk to them?”

Garrin, Dolf, Callan, Dillon, Ryker, and Ethan walked into the apothecary shop a few minutes later. They made introductions then got right into business.

“Just to keep you up to date,” Alaric said. “Crescent Moon is on to us. Today, they tried to send one of their pack members as a refugee to spy on us.”

Everyone nodded.

“We’ll be alert,” Alpha Sharpe said.

“I promised these girls I’d give them a ride on my wolf,” Thea said.

“Of course,” Alpha Sharpe said. “This will keep us occupied for some time, I imagine.”

Thea and the triplets left to go give the girls a ride while the rest of them talked shop. They undressed in the woods and shifted. Then the girls each climbed onto Thea's back. They took off at a slow trot through the woods, flanked by Thea's Delta team guard. Thea and the triplets chatted over mind link.

"What if we built a little cottage in the woods?" Alaric said. "We could have one on one time there when we need it."

"I like that idea," Thea said.

"I agree," Conri said.

"Me too," Kai said.

"There might be something already built that we could get set up quickly," Alaric said. "I'll look into it."

"My hero," Thea said. "It feels so good to run through the woods with you guys. I'm so glad I shifted. I knew I was missing something when I was just human."

"We're glad too. For ourselves, but even more for you," Kai said.

"We felt your pain," Conri said.

"And we feel your joy now," Alaric said. "This is preferable."

They let their wolves have some time in charge, making sure they were mindful of the girls on Zoe's back.

After a while, Thea felt a pull again.

"Hey, Zoe, do you feel that?" Thea thought.

"Yeah," Zoe said in her mind. "It feels like that same presence from before. Except now it feels like it's calling out to you."

"It feels like it needs help. We should check it out, right?" Thea said.

"Yeah."

Thea took control, changed directions, and made her way toward it. The triplets and Delta team followed her toward the border.

"Where are you going?" Conri thought to her.

"I don't know," Thea thought. "I feel something."

"I feel something too," Kai said. "That forcefield you put on all of us and around the border—it feels like it's buzzing. Like there's something at the perimeter."

"Maybe we should let Delta team check it out first," Alaric said over mind link as they approached the border of their pack lands.

Alaric caught up to Thea, got in front of her, and turned to slow her down. That's when he saw her necklace.

"Your necklace is glowing," Alaric said over mind link.

"That means—" Kai said.

"Vampires!" Conri yelled over mind link.
