

Chapter 268 I Just Want To Be With You

Sabrina now understood why the police hadn't discovered anything about Zeke. It was simply too complex. Zeke had been sold before, and even his son had been unaware of it.

The waiter brought their coffee, and Sabrina stirred hers thoughtfully, contemplating how to tell Trevor.

She already received two critical pieces of information from him. One was the location of Hobson and his connection to Zeke.

Sabrina was mindful that asking too many questions might raise Zeke's suspicions, so she decided not to press for more information.

The best decision seemed to be to leave the remaining investigation to the police.

Trevor had fulfilled his purpose. His usefulness in this matter had come to an end.

Trevor noticed Sabrina's silence and grew nervous. "Have you made a decision? Are you planning to break up with me?"

Lowering her eyes, Sabrina took a moment to collect her thoughts and to choose her words carefully.

She recognized an opportunity to end her relationship with Trevor and saw this situation as a catalyst.

Instead of exposing that she had deliberately gotten close to Trevor, she could break up with him naturally, using this situation as an opportunity.

But what she did was heartless and selfish.

She understood from the beginning that her involvement with him would ultimately hurt Trevor.

Despite this, she believed that a clean break, painful as it might be, was better than dragging out the relationship any further.

Trevor looked at Sabrina nervously. He had already taken her silence as her answer, but there was still a glimmer of hope in his eyes.

As Sabrina was about to speak, a sudden shadow fell over her, prompting her to look up.

There stood Tyrone, his icy gaze fixed on her.

The atmosphere grew tense as his penetrating eyes bore into her.

Tyrone exuded a commanding presence, dressed impeccably in a meticulously tied suit adorned with a delicate tie clip. His simple black overcoat added to his distinguished appearance, making him appear taller and more dashing.

Surprised and caught off guard, she glanced at Trevor before rising to her feet. "Tyrone, what are you doing here?"

Before Tyrone could say anything, Trevor seized the opportunity and swiftly rose from his seat. He acknowledged Tyrone with a nod. "Mr. Blakely."

Trevor inwardly breathed a sigh of relief that they had been interrupted at that moment. He didn't care that it was Sabrina's ex-husband, but he felt lucky that he had arrived in time.

He knew what Sabrina was about to say, but he didn't want to end their relationship.

So, he decided to use this opportunity for a quick exit before Sabrina had the chance to mention the words of break up to him.

"Sabrina, Mr. Blakely must have something important to discuss with you. I'll leave now and talk to you later."

Trevor left the cafe without waiting for a response.

Sabrina watched his receding figure, momentarily speechless.

She then turned to Tyrone and asked again, "What are you doing here?"

Tyrone sat down, crossing his legs and placing his elbows on the armrest. His fingers interlocked in front of him as he maintained his composed demeanor. Looking up at Sabrina, his gaze was steady and unwavering. "You and Trevor planned to meet here?"

Sabrina also sat down and took a sip of coffee before responding. "Yes."

An air of tension settled, thickening the atmosphere for a moment.

"You haven't broken up yet?" Tyrone asked.

Sabrina frowned and looked up at him in disbelief.

Suddenly, a realization dawned on her, and she gripped the spoon tightly. She narrowed her eyes at Tyrone, her expression intense and focused. "We have a good relationship. Why should we break up?"

Tyrone's eyes darkened, and he raised his eyebrows. "A good relationship? Do you think I don't know what happened at the hot spring resort?"

Sabrina shrugged her shoulders, defiance in her expression. "So what? It was just a drunken mistake. Shirley didn't take it seriously. Why should I?"

Hearing this, Tyrone looked at her with a flash of doubt in his eyes, his gaze piercing through her.

He gritted his teeth, and his jaw clenched in frustration. "What did you just say? A mistake? And that doesn't bother you?"

"No, he was just drunk and unconscious."

"Sabrina!" Tyrone's frown deepened as he stared at her. "Whether he was conscious or not, he was cheating on you! Besides, he and Shirley have known each other for a long time. How can you be sure that he didn't lie to you?"

"What does that have to do with you?"

Sabrina felt a throbbing headache coming on.

Tyrone was forcing her to break up with Trevor.

Sabrina was apprehensive, uncertain of how Tyrone would badger her after the breakup.

His gaze lingered on Sabrina for a few seconds. Suddenly, he let out a bitter laugh. "You're so infatuated with him that you can even accept his infidelity, but you can't forgive me. I can give you everything he can and even more. I can provide what he can't give you."

Sabrina had never harbored any genuine feelings for Trevor. From the beginning, it had all been a facade, a carefully crafted act to gain access to the information she needed. Her lack of emotional attachment to Trevor made it easier for her to dismiss his infidelity.

It was because she loved Tyrone too much that made her so vulnerable to his actions, causing her profound hurt and preventing her from finding solace.

Sabrina said, "Mental infidelity is also infidelity. Don't forget that you admitted the day before yesterday that you loved Galilea."

Tyrone gazed at her with a sorrowful expression, his emotions inscrutable.

After a moment, he said softly, "Sabrina, I had no choice. You know I love you."

"No, I don't know." Sabrina's casual tone belied the weight of her words. "I can break up with him and never be together again. And I will do the same for you. What do you think? It's fair, isn't it?"

Sabrina's words cut through the air like a knife. Her heartless tone and callous disregard for his feelings sent a piercing chill through his heart. He raised his hand to pinch between his eyebrows and lowered his head tiredly. "Is that so?"

"Well, what do you think?"

Tyrone's silence hung in the air for a few seconds, the weight of the situation sinking in. Suddenly, a smile appeared on his face. But it wasn't one of joy or relief. Instead, it held a strange and firm determination—a glimmer of something that Sabrina couldn't comprehend. His eyes flashed a storm of conflicting feelings. "I'll tell you exactly what I think. There's no way! You will never get rid of me for the rest of your life!"

"Tyrone, you..."

Tyrone suddenly stood up, taking Sabrina by surprise. He grabbed her wrist, and she instinctively tried to pull away, but his grip was firm. With determined steps, he led her towards the door, his movements quick and purposeful.

"What are you doing? Let me go!"

Tyrone's fingers tightened as Sabrina struggled.

When they arrived at the parking lot in front of the cafe, Tyrone swung open the passenger-side door and effortlessly lifted Sabrina into the seat. He swiftly fastened her seat belt, his movements precise and efficient.

He closed the door with a resounding thud. He dashed around the car and got in the driver's seat.

Sabrina, still in a state of shock, quickly unclipped her seat belt and immediately went to push the door open.
But it was too late. Tyrone activated the central locking system, trapping her inside the car. She tugged at the handle in frustration, but it was no use.

She leaned against the back of the chair in rage.
"Tyrone, what do you want? Tell me."

"Break up with him!"

"No!"

Tyrone took out an envelope from the storage compartment and dropped it in her lap.

Opening the envelope, she saw an intimate picture of Trevor and Shirley.

"I advise you to think it over. If you don't break up, there will only be more and more such photos!"

As pieces of the puzzle fell into place, Sabrina's mind raced with shock and disbelief. Thinking back to the broken surveillance cameras that day, she suddenly understood something. She looked at Tyrone with incredulity. "Did you arrange what happened that day?"

"Yes."

"Why would you do that?" Sabrina asked.

Tyrone went to great lengths to separate her and Trevor. He went as far as hiring a call girl to carry out his plan.

No wonder she thought it was such a coincidence. It turned out that it was Tyrone's plan. Shirley must have been drunk or drugged that day.

"You're out of your mind!"

Tyrone smiled faintly, and his voice was calm, but there was an edge to it that made her uneasy. "You're right! I am out of my mind. I want to be with you. I'll never leave you alone. You either get back with me or be single for the rest of your life!"

Sabrina stared at him with hatred, anger, astonishment, and complexity. She couldn't believe what she was hearing.

At first, she wanted to use Trevor for more information. But she also hoped to make Tyrone back away by giving the appearance that they were dating. But as the situation escalated, she realized Tyrone was becoming more unhinged with his erratic and unpredictable behavior.

If she didn't agree to break up with Trevor, Tyrone might do something more crazy.

She didn't know what to do with him.

"Okay, I'll break up with Trevor, but I hope you won't get involved in the matter between us and respect my opinion, okay?"
