Chapter 2181

At the Collins and McMillian family-owned stores, these gifts could be redeemed without spending another dime. “Here’s to the six couples, may they have a century of harmony and be bound together for life!”

“Our David is too generous,” sobbed one receiver, “The gifts he’s given are even better than the grand prize at my dad’s company gala. | swear I’m going to be his fan for life!”

“The generosity of these newlyweds is just astounding!” novelbin

Those who couldn’t make it to the venue in time to snatch up the packets rushed online to leave their blessings and take part in the raffle.

The prizes included a variety of home appliances: the grand prize featured a top-of-the-line fridge, air conditioner, and combo steam-and-bake oven, each worth thousands; the second prize included dishwashers, washing machines, and range hoods; and the third prize offered microwaves, electric hot pots, and hair dryers.

All from the trusted Collins and McMillian brands. Up in the air. Romeo held Arabella close, showering her with fervent kisses. Her lips were soft and sweet, her ears delicate to the touch.

Arabella could feel his dominant and impatient kisses making her hear more sensitive, like a seashell swept away by the waves at the shore, completely engulfed in them.

After a long moment, Romeo gazed at the girl before him — a moment he had been waiting for far too long. His eyes shimmered with a hazy depth of emotion, “You look absolutely stunning today.”

From the first glance, he had been captivated.

The day had finally come.

He leaned in to kiss her lips again and again, murmuring, “At last, you’re all mine.”

He swore to pamper the girl before him into the happiest person in the world, to make her not regret marrying him, wanting to be with him life after life.

Soon, their plane touched down in a place called Fairy Tale Kingdom. Romeo had spent a small fortune and two years building a dream castle for Arabella.

White walls and blue rooftops surrounded a heart-shaped lake, sprawling beneath them; from the sky, they looked like two entwined hearts, both romantic and majestic.

The view changed with the seasons, each more breathtaking than the last.

As the plane descended, Arabella watched the castle grow larger, its grandeur overwhelming her.

“This is your fairy tale world,” Romeo said, knowing her childhood had been spent with only Grannie Grace for company, without even her parents’ affection.

He had created a world where everything was as magical as a fairy tale, complete with a golf course, a helipad, and hot springs — everything one could wish for. Please read the original content at .

One could easily spend a year here without ever feeling bored.

“When we have time in the future, we can come here for vacations, take boat rides on the lake, see the city’s bustle, the fish, watch the sunrise and sunset.” Romeo held her close, “Whatever you wish to do, I’ll be right there with you.” Please read the original content at .

Arabella kissed him, knowing in her heart that this man truly loved her. Romeo, surprised by her spontaneous kiss, responded with even more passion. When the plane stopped, the two of them found it hard to part.

After some time, the elders of the Collins family and the McMillian family had already stood at the entrance of Fajaléinígdóm to Welórhé guests from all over. Those nearby were chauffeured by luxury cars from the Collins and McMillian families, while those further afield were picked up by planes and cruise ships. Please read the original content at .

When Romeo was leading Arabella down the stairs from the plane, the media reporters were frantically taking photos.

The handsome Romeo and the gorgeous Arabella, their appearance causing people to exclaim in admiration, “They’re just perfect for each other.”

It was as if they were destined to be together.

“Romeo, Bella.” Louisa greeted them with a smile. “Go grab a bite first, rest for a bit, and get changed. The makeup artists and stylists are already waiting for you in your room.”

“Thanks, Mom,” Romeo thanked her.

Hearing her son-in-law call her “Mom,” Louisa couldn’t help but smile, “It’s no trouble at all. Six of our kids are getting married today, you have no idea how happy I am.”

“We’ll come to greet the guests in a while,” Arabella said.

“No need. We’re enough over here!” Louisa didn’t want her precious daughter to get too worn out. “The morning is for the ceremony, and the early guests can enjoy a buffet in the aquarium lounge.”

Arabella was taken aback, “There’s an aquarium here?”

“Yep, Romeo brought the whole aquarium here just so you could see your favorite tropical fish at home. Some of the floors even have large acrylic panels, so it’s like standing over the ocean, watching the fish swimming beneath your feet. You’ll see when you go for a visit.”

Arabella looked at Romeo, at a loss for words. He had truly put a lot of effort into preparing this surprise.

“After dining, guests can look around. The castle is huge, and there are sightseeing cars. It’ll keep them busy for quite a while. Then comes the wedding.”

At the mention of the wedding, Arabella’s heart skipped a beat. Time was flying by. As Romeo and Arabella walked away, Phillip and the others finished greeting the guests and headed towards their in-laws. Today, each one of them was dressed to the nines, their faces radiant with festive smiles.

Shirley wore an emerald necklace with exactly one hundred and eleven beads, symbolizing eternal devotion, a gift from Phillip. Now, each bead was worth around $20,000, and her emerald earrings, with their large surface area and thickness, were worth over tens of millions.

The attire of the Collins family was equally exquisite. Cornelia’s festooned gown, for example, symbolized good fortune. Just crafting the festooned details required eleven skilled artisans and a total of 264 hours of labor.

The couples’ outfits complemented each other beautifully. For this wedding, they had all brought out their most formal, most grandiose selves.

The wedding guests hailed from all corners of the globe, renowned politicians, business tycoons, and superstars among them.

There were even members of various royal families.

Their gifts ranged from cases of gold and jewels to land deeds, business contracts, limited edition watches, luxury cars, and checks.

To maintain order, thousands of security personnel were deployed (not to mention the numerous secret agents in the shadows, safeguarding the well-being of everyone present. Please read the original content at .

Some royal weddings paled in comparison to the lavishness of today's union between the Collins and the McMillian families. The wedding had become a global sensation.

Guests checked in at the entrance by scanning a QR code, and their photos would pop up on the real-time feed wall inside the castle.

In order to make the wedding more fun, all the guests present, including the bridesmaids and groomsmen, were encouraged to upload photos of the bride's welcome ceremony, the wedding process, and group photos of friends and family on the spot. Please read the original content at .

Leia had someone upload a smiling picture of her, and in no time, her beaming face was scrolling across the live photo wall.

In their spare time, these guests would send blessings to the newlyweds by scanning QR codes on their smartphones. The messages would instantly pop up on the grand castle's LED wall, scrolling for all to see. Some would even record and upload videos of well-wishes to be played live. Others prefer to directly scan the code to remotely watch the wedding banquet scene and other videos, fully immersed in the atmosphere.

Five o'clock in the afternoon. Every guest had arrived, personally invited to partake in the splendid celebration.

The venue was strewn with white starlight, grandiose and dreamlike, a symphony of flowers mingling with the twinkling stars, as if one had accidentally stepped into a breathtaking white fairy tale.

The play of light and shadows conjured a romance that was palpable in the air.

Those who enter can feel surrounded by the happiness and contentment of being enveloped by the galaxy of stars and a sea of flowers. A visual feast unfolds before them, and the soft light creates a fairy-tale land, hazy and filled with charm.

At that moment, the nation's most renowned host, Swift, took a look at the time and said in a passionate and generous voice, "The auspicious hour has arrived! Let's welcome our bride, Arabella, with the warmest round of applause!"

Thunderous clapping filled the air. The grand doors slowly swung open.

A beam of light fell on Arabella, who was dressed in a luxurious white trailing gown. Her hair was elegantly pinned up, crowned with a glittering diamond tiara and a flowing veil. She looked like a celestial being stepping out of heaven, stunning everyone present.

The glittering cosmos seemed to cloak her; each star a diamond that dreamily sparkled, dazzling under the spotlight in every dimension.

[She's so gorgeous!!] exclaimed the online viewers, as though the bride was their friend or family member. Some were even moved to tears.

[That diamond wedding gown is just too glittering, too beautiful; 'Dazzling' doesn't even begin to describe a tenth of its beauty. And the bride herself. she's just so stunning, such a feast for the eyes!]

[If I were half as beautiful and poised as her, I'd wake up smiling from my dreams!] Arabella's gown outshone the very stars in the sky, and paired with her exquisite beauty, she truly redefined "gorgeousness."

A beam of light lit up at her feet, extending into the distance. Arabella gracefully walked down this starlit galaxy path, her steps ethereal, a gentle mist spreading out around her, making her appear all the more like a fairy descending from above.

As she reached the heart-shaped glass in front of her, the stars illuminated it. Along with it, a huge, flower-adorned gift box on the heart shape was also lit up. As the music climaxed, the gift box opened itself, and Romeo's appearance drew a fresh burst of applause from the crowd.

He had changed into another suit, looking even more handsome and distinguished.

He extended his hand towards Arabella. Arabella smiled and walked toward him, placing her hand in his.

Chapter 2184

Each bride glided down the aisle in a wedding dress of a different hue, none bearing the weight or garishness often expected, but rather carrying the lightness of a morning mist, each gown softly radiant in its beauty.

“Ladies and gentlemen, are the grooms handsome?” the emcee, Swift, bellowed with infectious enthusiasm to the guests below. “Handsome!”

“And are the brides gorgeous?”

“Gorgeous!”

“Do they look like a match made in heaven?”

“Perfect match!”

Applause surged once more, buoying the already spirited atmosphere.

Swift's voice swelled with fervor, "It's a true honor to share this joyful and grand occasion with you all. Let me spill a little secret: each wedding dress you see was specially crafted by the groom for his bride, a unique treasure in all the world."

The audience erupted in another wave of enthusiastic applause, and those tuning in via live stream were green with envy.

“Now, I've got a few questions for our newlyweds,” Swift continued, playfully stoking the crowd's excitement, “and I bet everyone here is dying to know, who was the first to say 'I love you' in this love story?” The question not only sent the gathered guests into a frenzy but even those watching live online couldn't contain their excitement.

All six grooms raised their hands in unison, proudly admitting they were the ones to chase their brides. “Who planned the first date?”

Again, the six grooms raised their hands.

“Who's the romantic one?”

All brides pointed to their grooms without hesitation.

“When you argue, who's the first to wave the white flag?”

The grooms lifted their hands once more, prompting peals of laughter across the hall.

Swift, grinning from ear to ear, chimed in, “I can tell our grooms are chomping at the bit to slip those wedding rings onto our brides' fingers. But to snatch up those diamond bands, they'll have to get past one more challenge—our bridesmaids and groomsmen! Let's give a warm welcome to the bridal party!”

A resounding wave of applause filled the room, lingering in the air.

The bridesmaids and groomsmen appeared atop the same heart-shaped steps where Romeo had made his entrance, standing across a metaphorical Milky Way from the newlyweds.

“Let's have our bridesmaids, representing the bride's family, throw a couple of questions at our grooms,” the host announced as the applause roared like an incoming tide.

“We've got a few burning questions for groom Romeo,” Joyce said into the microphone, her eyes fixed on Romeo across the silvery path, “Will you continue to be as understanding and accommodating to Bella after marriage as you were during your courtship?”

Romeo faced her and replied with earnest sincerity, “Yes, I will.”

Mya took the microphone, her gaze locking onto Romeo, “After you're married, Bella will be the boss of the house. Do you agree with that?”

Romeo's smile was both charming and captivating as he responded, “I couldn't agree more.”

"Alright, now it's the groomsmen's turn. Let's see if they can SOUS a some extra perks far room Dost ing." Swift said with a wink, gesturing for the groomsmen to take their shot. Please read the original content at .

"I'm usually not swamped at work, and | don't get tired easily, so there's no need for my wife to help me with these things, but | can certainly give her a shoulder rub, a back massage, or squeeze her legs a bit," Romeo's response drew a round of applause from the crowd.

The best man, Jackson, chuckled as he turned to Arabella, "So, after the wedding, are you cool with the groom having his own little stash of cash?"

"I'm all for it," Arabella replied generously. Thunderous applause erupted once again. But Romeo added, "I've already got a treasure trove, my wife, she's the biggest one I'll ever have in my life."

His words had a double meaning; not only did his wife manage all his finances, indeed making her his greatest treasure, but she herself was a treasure.

Lively clapping filled the room once more.

Another bridesmaid turned to the five grooms on stage and asked, "Would you gentlemen be willing to hand over the financial reins to your wives?"

In perfect unison, all five grooms responded, "Already done."

None of them had hidden any personal funds; they had handed over financial control to their wives right when they paid the dowry.

Everyone was astounded, even those watching the live stream were green with envy.

Another bridesmaid posed the question, "Are you willing to compliment the bride every day after the wedding, to be utterly devoted to your wife, making her days joyful and the envy of others?"

"No problem," the five grooms answered in chorus. The viewers of the live stream were deeply moved. [Oh my, our David is just so dashing! So sweet! So lovable!]

[Have you guys noticed how each of Arabella's five brothers has their own kind of handsome? Hans exudes a mature charm, Chasel is striking, Clark is talented, Sean has that cool allure, and David's handsomeness comes with such warmth!]

Every single one of them was a feast for the eyes!

The bridesmaids then asked the five grooms, "Are you willing to always put your brides first in your life, to clear the path for them, to shield them from the storm, to forever dote on them, cherish them, and be their safe harbor?"

"We are," the five grooms replied together. The brides were moved to tears.

"Whether you're well-off or even wealthier in the future, lucky or even luckier, will you always love her, support her, and encourage her?" "Whether she's beautiful or even more so, intelligent or more so, and interesting or increasingly so, will you always stand by her without reservation?"

"Will you prioritize her over your career, strive for the family, and become a better version of yourself?" The five grooms solemnly answered in unison, "We will."

The applause was like a tidal wave, engulfing the venue.

The groomsmen then turned their questions to the brides.

Chapter 2186

Under a canopy of stars, six ethereal white orbs descended gently from the heavens.

Each of the six grooms, as if on cue, reached out to catch the falling stars. A simple touch of a hidden switch, and voila—a ring box tumbled into the palms of their hands.

At this moment, Swift felt a lump in his throat, his eyes brimming with emotion. His voice, rich with feeling, echoed through the crowd.

"To the beautiful couples standing before us," he began, "are you ready to place these rings upon each other's fingers—symbols of your eternal love and commitment?"

In unison, the couples declared, "We do."

The screens flanking the stage lit up with a wedding ode, and the guests recited in harmony: "Today, we bear witness to these unions, to love in equality and respect. May your paths be woven with grace and your futures bright with promise."

As the last words fell away, the exchange of rings was complete.

"With these rings, you shoulder the dreams and duties of a shared future," Swift announced, his voice now filled with pomp and ceremony. "And now, it is my honor to declare—you may kiss your brides!"

The couples kissed—a tender, lingering embrace—as the music swelled around them.

Leia, seated among the audience, watched Sean and Ophelia kissing on stage, her eyes shining with tears, her lips curling into a smile as she clapped for them.

Caden, too, had eyes glistening with emotion, his applause ongoing as he watched Romeo and Arabella wrapped up in their heartfelt kiss.

Across the venue, Derrick, Timothy, and Jeffery watched the pair, their hearts swelling with joy for their friends' happiness and yet, tinged with a sense of longing.

The couples' kisses were reluctant to end, but as the music gave way to a new tune, they began to dance on stage, lifting the energy to a crescendo.

The brides, in their trailing gowns, moved through the steps with ease, beautifully in sync with their grooms. Applause washed over them like waves, ceaseless and thunderous. Amidst the joy and satisfaction on the faces of the newlyweds, the elders were visibly moved, their eyes red with emotion.

As the dance concluded, Swift spoke again, "Given the sheer number of guests, it's impractical for our newlyweds to toast each table individually. So, may I suggest our bridesmaids bring the champagne onstage? Let's invite the couples' families up to raise a toast together, shall we?"

A resounding "Yes!" filled the room.

The families ascended the stage, each handed a glass. The bridesmaids poured the champagne sparingly, even when it came to the grooms, who had their regular glasses comically switched out for towering champagne flutes by their mischievous groomsmen, eliciting roars of laughter from the crowd.

Together, the couples and their families lifted their glasses in a toast to the guests, who, in turn, stood and returned the gesture, draining their glasses in unison.

“And now,” Swift declared, “let the feast begin!” As his words rang out, the banquet commenced.

During the evening, the atmosphere was buzzing with excitement as guests like Erlinda, Barry, and Adair came up to toast Arabella and Romeo.

After dinner, the emcee, Swift, took to the stage and announced, “Now, we come to the highlight of the evening — our portrait raffle for all our esteemed guests. We invite our six couples to join us on stage to select sixty-six lucky attendees for our grand prize.”

The six couples ascended the stage, where six steps rose to meet them, revealing a 4-foot tall heart-shaped column.

With a touch from both partners' hands upon the surface, the magical selection would begin as the portraits of the guests spun in a flurry.

Romeo and Arabella placed their hands on the heart-shaped column, as did the other five couples.

Behind them, the giant screen came alive with a cascade of faces, ticking down from three. And at one, they all removed their hands, revealing the sixty-six lucky faces on the screen.

"Congratulations to these sixty-six guests, you've just won a luxury car!" Swift announced.

The room erupted in cheers and applause.

"And for those of you watching the live stream, don't you wish you were here?"

Swift's words had viewers shouting at their screens, [Yes! Yes!]

Even though they knew Swift couldn't hear them, they couldn't help but vocalize their excitement.

"Everyone can join the fun by scanning the QR code on the screen behind me and taking part in our cash grab game. Just a little hint — ninety-nine lucky viewers will win a random cash prize worth over a thousand dollars. Let's start the countdown from ten."

As the countdown began, those watching scrambled to participate, wishing they had more hands to scan and win.

Swift watched the countdown end and smiled, "Time's up! Congratulations to the ninety-nine lucky viewers — your prize money will be transferred to your accounts shortly. And thank you for your attention to this wedding."

Turning to the camera, Swift continued, "Moreover, the Collins family and the McMillian family have joined forces to build ninety-nine schools and ninety-nine hospitals in underprivileged areas. They're also donating a billion dollars in charity funds to support medical care for children with severe illnesses.

Additionally, each guest here will contribute to a breakfast program for rural children, including donations of books and school supplies. Let's give them another round of applause for their generosity."

The applause was like a symphony, resounding and harmonious.

"As our evening comes to a close, on behalf of the six couples and their families, we thank you for joining us. Please step outside to enjoy the grand fireworks show. Afterward, feel free to stay or go as you please."

Those wishing to stay could find plenty of rooms in the castle, while others could take home goody bags and be chauffeured away by luxury car or private jet.

The goody bags included skincare and perfumes from Arabella's own brand, limited edition designer bags, and even high-end watches, shavers, and lighters from the Collins and McMillian family brands, all for the taking.

Guests applauded once more before rising to the enchanting garden outside, awaiting the fireworks display. The sky blossomed with vibrant fireworks, competing like flowers in a garden, filling the night with wonder.
