

Chapter 1742 Out Of Mind

Mandy, a junior high school student, was used to getting her way since she was a child, which made her very confident.

When she heard what Della said, Mandy got really annoyed. She snapped back, "Fine, I won't talk to him. Locke isn't my only friend, you know."

As Mandy started to walk away, she remembered Della's smug expression. She stopped and turned back to face her.

"I promise I'll never speak to Locke again. Mrs. Avila, you should ask your son not to bother me anymore."

Della was left speechless by Mandy's sharp retort.

After she left the Avila family's house, Mandy deleted all of Locke's contact details, and changed her phone number and social media accounts.

The Hamilton and the Avila families had been friends for many years, but Mandy knew that Della, who was quite snobbish, didn't like her anymore.

Moreover, the relationship between the two families had slowly deteriorated since Locke moved overseas.

Even after Mandy stopped communicating with Locke, he persisted in trying to reach her through e-mail. Mandy, who tended to be irritable and competitive, found this annoying.

Out of respect for their past friendship, she didn't block his e-mail address. Yet, she never responded to any of his mails.

Time flew by in Locke's absence. Before she knew it, the Hamilton family sent Mandy abroad for further studies during her college years.

During her first year, Mandy was fully occupied with learning a new language and adapting to her new surroundings, leaving her little time to think about Locke.

One day, at a design exhibition organized by her school, Mandy encountered Draco.

Right when she saw this skilled and handsome upperclassman, she instantly fell for him.

Draco was from a modest family. Mandy, whose own family had fallen from their high status, thought they could make a perfect match.

Mandy, therefore, devoted herself wholeheartedly to Draco with all her youthful enthusiasm.

Although she wasn't fond of running in the morning, she started waking up early to exercise, hoping to bump into Draco.

She actively joined group activities, aiming to make a good impression on him.

After getting to know Draco, Mandy began bringing him dinner every day and spent as much time around him as she could. Gradually, she stopped thinking about Locke and focused all her attention on Draco.

Despite her efforts, Draco's heart remained out of reach.

When Draco finished his studies and returned to start his career, Mandy did the same. Shortly after graduating, she came back home, trying even harder to get Draco's attention.

As Mandy stood under the shower, letting the warm water cascade over her face, she struggled to distinguish whether she was crying or not.

She reflected on the past years and sighed deeply. She hadn't expected to become entangled with Locke again.

Chapter 1742 Out Of Mind

 +120 Points at most

"Ah!" Mandy exclaimed in frustration, slapping her forehead in the shower.

"Mandy, have you lost your mind? Why did you sleep with Locke?" Mandy murmured. "What should I do now?"

Our ads aim to provide better support for authors.

