

Chapter 382 If Only She Could Disappear

---

When Rita's plan failed, she decided to return to Violetholt, but Horace told her to stay put in Mathias for a while longer.

Horace said, "It just so happens that I'm going to Mathias tomorrow. We'll both return home together."

Rita didn't see anything wrong with his plan and was just about to acquiesce when Horace added, "By the way, I'll bring Sierra with me so that we can find a time to apologize to Sabrina. It's Sierra's fault. You can use the opportunity to spend time with Sabrina and develop a mother-daughter bond with Sabrina."

Rita's eyes went wide with disbelief. Her lips opened and shut almost immediately. When she finally managed to calm herself, she murmured in a placating tone, "Horace, you know Sierra's temper..."

Furthermore, Sabrina probably hated her very much for what happened last night. So how could the two of them develop a bond?

Horace interrupted sternly, "Since Sierra has a bad temper, she needs to be disciplined and made to realize what is right and what is wrong. If you always spoil her, you will ruin her."

"Okay. I understand. But as for Sabrina, she has misunderstood me deeply. I don't think the misunderstanding between us can be resolved easily."

"As long as you treat her well, she will come to understand you as time goes on. Don't rush," Horace assured lightly.

As things stood now, if Horace went to Tyrone and told Tyrone that he was his biological father and asked Tyrone to return to the Fowler family with him, Tyrone would probably throw him out.

Horace was terrified of seeing Tyrone look at him with hatred, so he had no choice but to use the connection between Rita and Sabrina to bring Tyrone closer to him.

On the other side, Rita was feeling very helpless.

After hanging up the phone, Rita almost allowed the phone to slip through her fingers again.

How could Horace ask her to apologize to Sabrina?

He even asked her to please Sabrina and try to get along with her!

Sabrina was just a bastard, so how could she be worthy of Rita's love and attention?

That day, Sierra took some money from Rita and left the Fowler family's house. However, before she could even leave Violetholt, Blayze's people caught her and locked her up in an apartment.

Even though Blayze restricted Sierra's freedom, he treated her well in other ways.

If Sierra desired any kind of food, she just had to ask the bodyguards and they would go out and purchase it for her.

In the beginning, she used the disguise of ordering food to torture the bodyguards. But after two days, ordering food incessantly lost its luster so she stopped.

Finally, she was released today and brought back to the Fowler family's house.

Sierra breathed a sigh of relief and quickly sought out Rita. However, she couldn't find Rita anywhere in the Fowler family's house. After asking around, Sierra found out Rita had gone to Mathias.

Then Horace told her that she would accompany him to Mathias and apologize to Sabrina.

Sierra wanted to refuse, but when she saw Horace's stern face, she swallowed her protest.

Apologize to Sabrina? Did that mean that she had no choice but to discard her dignity?

She had never lost to Sabrina ever since they were children. Now that she was being forced to grovel, Sabrina must be feeling very proud.

Sierra was unwilling to apologize to Sabrina, but she still followed Horace to Mathias.

On the way, Sierra didn't dare to complain at all.

When she arrived in Mathias and saw Rita, she nearly sagged with relief. As soon as they were alone, Sierra cried and complained about being forced to apologize to Sabrina. She told Rita that she didn't want to do it.

But instead of assuring Sierra that she wouldn't have to apologize to Sabrina like Sierra expected, Rita sighed and explained the difficulties she was currently facing. Finally, Rita added, "There is nothing I can do about it. Horace won't change his mind."

In fact, Sierra should consider herself lucky that Horace was still willing to protect her. In his opinion, Sierra should have apologized to Sabrina long time ago.

"What prompted Horace to ask you to mend ties with Sabrina?"

"Maybe it's because of Tyrone. A few days ago, he went to the Fowler residence in person to seek justice for Sabrina. I've seen Horace watch Tyrone's interview before. He speaks highly of Tyrone. His visit here was to cooperate with the Blakely family..."

Sierra recalled Tyrone's strong and tall figure, and she liked him even more when hearing how considerate and responsible he was.

Yet, it suddenly occurred to her that Tyrone's consideration and responsibility were for Sabrina's sake.

This made Sierra's eyes turn green with envy.

Why? How could Sabrina get the love of Tyrone and Blayze at the same time?

Why was Tyrone still fascinated about Sabrina even though they were divorced?

If Tyrone could treat her like this and seek justice for her after she was wronged, she would be on cloud nine.

"Rita, are you really going to mend ties with Sabrina and take her back to the Fowler family?" Sierra asked, shaking Rita's arm.

"Of course not. Even if I wanted to, Sabrina would never agree. She is not a fool. Don't worry. No one will take what belongs to you."

Sierra breathed a sigh of relief. "Rita, you are so kind to me."

Rita smiled at Sierra's words, but her smile froze when something occurred to her. She patted on the back of Sierra's hand and said, "Horace and Blayze want you to study abroad. Which country do you want to go to? They will arrange everything for you."

Sierra gaped at Rita in disbelief. When she saw Rita's resolute expression, she panicked.

"Rita, I don't want to study abroad. Go and talk to them."

Rita sighed and shook her head. "It won't change anything, Sierra. You know I am just a nobody in this family. How can I change the decision made by the two of them? Besides, you've caused a big trouble this time."

Sierra burst into tears. Grasping Rita's hands, she sobbed. "Rita, I really don't want to study abroad. I'm not familiar with any other country and I hardly know any foreign language. What if something bad happens to me? Do you have the heart to see me suffer elsewhere?"

Rita patted Sierra's back comfortingly, but she remained unmoved. "It's not that I don't want to help you. It's just that I have no choice. Don't worry. They will arrange everything for you and won't let you suffer."

No matter how hard Sierra cried, Rita wouldn't give in.

Ever since Sierra was a child, Rita always granted her wishes dotingly. If Rita, the one person who always supported her, wouldn't budge on this issue, then there was no room for maneuver.

Sierra knew she had to leave and study abroad.

But... She was not young anymore. By the time she returned from school in a few years, everyone in her circle would be unfamiliar with her. Who would want to be with her then? She didn't want to marry those small bosses and playboys.

Since Sierra was being forced to go abroad, why did she still have to apologize to Sabrina?

Sierra was intensely against the idea of apologizing to Sabrina.

However, before she could attempt to change Rita's mind once again, Horace came back and told them that she and Rita would visit the Blakely residence the day after tomorrow.

Under the authority of Horace, Sierra didn't dare to complain. She lowered her head, a hint of hatred flashing in her eyes.

Sierra was in a sulk and complained silently. Ever since she met Sabrina, nothing had gone her way! Sabrina was just a jinx!

If only Sabrina would meet her demise! Then, she wouldn't have to apologize. Perhaps, with Sabrina suddenly gone from their lives, Horace and Blayze wouldn't force her to go and study abroad.

As soon as this thought flashed through Sierra's mind, it took root and was all she could think about.

"Sierra." Rita poked Sierra and smiled apologetically at Horace. "Sierra? Didn't you hear Horace talking to you?"

Sierra quickly regained her composure, looked at Horace and nodded. "Yes."

Horace frowned and said nothing.
