

Chapter 1059 The Secret Of Salvation Society

Seeing his senior finally ready to share something significant, Liam felt a rush of anticipation and listened carefully.

He had a hunch that the man was about to reveal a crucial secret.

"Take a seat. Let me tell you what happened," Mr. Jenkins said with a chuckle, sitting down on the floor beside Liam.

"I bet you're curious about how the Saint Society came to be, right? Well, it all started with a space exploration decades ago. Back then, humanity was keen on unraveling the universe's mysteries. And naturally, the universe took notice of us. I mean, we caught the attention of certain cosmic forces, comprising numerous space civilizations. These civilizations were way ahead of us in understanding the human body," he said.

After a pause, he continued, "To them, Earth, despite its rapid development to us, is barely a blip. We're from a secluded civilization. Typically, the destiny of such a civilization is to be absorbed by more unified ones."

Listening, Liam furrowed his brow as he softly inquired, "So, are you saying our Earth will eventually

Chapter 1059 The Secret Of Salvatio 🎁 +120 Points at most be overtaken by these other civilizations?"

Mr. Jenkins shook his head, clarifying, "Actually, there's more than one way. There are two main possibilities, really. One is where external forces try to overpower us. The other is where they try to merge with us. And Earth, well, it's caught right in the middle of these two possibilities."

After a sigh, he added, "For many years, cosmic civilizations have been eyeing Earth, wanting to take it over. Over time, they've even groomed various forces on Earth for this purpose. But it ended up in a deadlock between the two most dominant forces. So, eventually, these cosmic civilizations decided to back local groups to do their bidding here on Earth. That's how the Salvation Society and the Saint Society came into existence."

Liam's brow furrowed in thought. So, these two organizations came from the same place but ended up fighting each other because of their differing ideologies?

Mr. Jenkins noticed Liam's concern but didn't probe further. He went on, "Right now, the Salvation Society is the only group in Aperia strong enough to stand up to the Saint Society! The reason the Saint Society targeted our leader this time was to crush the Salvation Society's last bit of hope. They've had enough. They're aiming to unify Earth by force!"

Liam gave a slight nod. He was familiar with the origins of both the Saint Society and the Salvation Society now.

But thinking about his master, he couldn't shake off his concern. "Do you think the master is still alive?"

Mr. Jenkins gave a nod, saying, "Oh, he's definitely still alive. He figured out that the head of War God House was double-crossing him. Instead of blowing his cover, he played along, hoping to uncover who else was involved. With things as they are, it's easier to work from the shadows now. Plus, this gives him a chance to see how deep the Saint Society has dug its claws into the Salvation Society."

Mr. Jenkins paused, letting out a deep sigh. "It's just too bad about Sumner's sacrifice. The young lady waiting outside, Laura, that's Sumner's granddaughter, right? You should treat her well in the future."

Liam, who had been all ears, didn't see that coming. He felt quite awkward, quickly setting things straight. "Laura and I? We're just friends, nothing more! You've got it all wrong. But why not let Laura in on this conversation, too?" he said.

Mr. Jenkins seemed to brush off Liam's clarification, yet he responded to Liam's question earnestly, "Given what I know of her, it's better she stays out of this loop. It might not just be bad for her to know, but it could also risk blowing your cover. I chose not to tell her for her own good."