

Chapter 1172 Get The House Back

"What did you just say? Say it again What kind of identification is that?"

The sergeant suddenly raised his voice and even Edgar and Rosalin could hear him clearly.

From the other end of the line, Trevor could clearly hear the sound of the glass breaking as the sergeant slammed it against the table.

It seemed that the sergeant knew Klein's badge.

Meanwhile, Edlin was confused. He didn't understand why the sergeant became suddenly so excited.

"There are two crossed pistols and also a shield on it. It seems to be made of metal..."

The sergeant didn't let him finish and scolded him dryly, "Edlin Pierce! You are in big trouble! No matter who showed you this identification, give it back to him immediately and with great respect. And while you're at it, make sure you apologize! Do whatever he asks of you. If you don't do as I say, then you don't need to go back to the station. You might as well take off your uniform right now and resign."

The sergeant didn't give Edlin the chance to say more and he hung up the phone angrily.

Edlin looked at his phone in shock and then looked at Trevor, who was standing in front of him.

Trevor didn't said anything and there was only a calm yet mysterious smile on his face.

At this point, Edlin panicked. He could tell from the sergeant's attitude just now that he had made a big mistake.

"I'm sorry, sir! It's just a misunderstanding!" Edlin apologized earnestly, trembling with fear. He was no longer arrogant as he was earlier.

He bowed to Trevor and apologized respectfully. Then he returned the ID to Trevor.

Glancing indifferently at Edlin, Trevor slowly took back his ID and said nothing.

Edlin was so anxious that he sweated heavily. He hurriedly shouted, "Dad! Mom! Apologize to him! This gentleman isn't someone to be trifled with. I might lose my job!"

Edgar and Rosalin also panicked.

Seeing their son, who was usually arrogant, lower his head and apologize, they realized they had better do the same.

"I'm sorry. It's all a mistake. Please forgive us. Don't let my son lose his job!" Edgar said humbly.

With an indifferent look, Trevor took out his phone with a smile. He looked at the time and said, "Five minutes. I'll give you five minutes to move out."

Edgar's and Rosalin's faces changed dramatically.

Rosalin's face went livid and she wanted to retort.

They had occupied the house for a long time and were not willing to leave the house now.

However, Edlin quickly agreed. "Okay, okay, we'll move out now! Please let us go."

Trevor just lifted his chin, suggesting they leave as soon as possible.

Rosalind was so anxious and sweating profusely. Five minutes was just long enough for Edgar and his wife to take a few valuables with them.

Carrying many bags, Edlin left with an apologetic smile on his face. He kept begging for mercy as he walked out, fearing that Trevor would call the sergeant to complain about him.

Trevor didn't say anything and just waved his hand for them to get out of here as soon as possible.

Edgar and Rosalin also went downstairs carrying many bags. Their faces were full of despair. They didn't understand why they were driven out even at this moment.

While Edgar and Rosalin were leaving, Asho and Bess went in with their luggage.

The two groups of people met on the narrow stairs.

Edlin and his family felt so ashamed that their faces turned red and they dared not raise their heads or look at Asho and Bess. They went downstairs in a hurry.

Asho and Bess were utterly stunned.

"Dragon, how did you do that? That's amazing! Thank you so much. If it weren't for you, we wouldn't have our house back!" Bess said sincerely. She was curious how Trevor had managed to get their house back, especially in such a short time.

Trevor smiled and made up an explanation, "I happened to know the superior of that policeman. Besides, they were wrong. I called the guy's superior to explain the situation and they just moved out."

Both Asho and Bess smiled happily.

They were happy to finally have their house back.

With a look of relief, Asho pushed the door open and sighed. "It's too tiring to go on a journey at midnight. We should rest now."