

Chapter 745

745 IRIS KNEW HER SUFFERING

Their method to exchange information was by the hawk, but with so many crows in the sky, there was no way the hawk could survive the journey. They also didn't know what kind of crows were this and what kind of calamity this flock would bring upon them.

"We will not hear from them," Cane said grimly. His expression turned very dark, when he calculated when this flock would arrive in their pack. He wondered what happened to the other pack and what kind of destruction that had happened to the other packs because of these crows.

Yet, once again, there was no way to know about it.

Iris was right, they needed to be prepared,

they were coming.

"Announce for evacuation!" Cane gave an order to Ethan and more to the other warriors around them. They needed to move quickly. "Check our storage food and gather everyone in the pack house!"

The pack house had a spacious space to shelter the whole pack member, but of course, it would be a challenge since there were knights from the Holy Kingdom and the additional children that came with them from the black market, also some of the Golden Light pack member.

To put it simple, they were overcrowded.

From the look of it, those crows would reach this pack within an hour or two.

After firing orders to his warriors, Cane shifted into his beast, his main concern was Iris and their baby. He needed to ensure their safety first and learned what kind of information Iris could gather from Abby.

"I can't tell you about him," Abby said, she clamped her mouth, determined not to say a single thing about Rei, but her curiosity got the best of her, as she started questioning Iris. "How do you know him? What he had done? What he told you?"

Iris leaned back against her backrest and smiled at Abby without saying anything, but it was enough for the Serafim to know she wouldn't get any answer from her.

With that, Abby changed her question. She was the same like Iris. Both of them desperate to get the answer, since the other person held so many secrets and information they needed to know, but Abby was very restricted to reveal anything to an outsider.

Yet, Iris knew so many things and reveal shocking information that needed to be questioned.

"When do you get the divine power? You are a runt. From what I know, you held no power until recently. What changed?" Abby tried to engage Iris in this topic again, but the luna was quick to bring the conversation back to the main point.

"How to destroy Decratric?" Iris repeated her question. She looked at Abby in the eyes and could see how the question made her restless and agitated her at the same time.

In Abby's mind, it was her duty as the Serafim to destroy Decratric. She also couldn't wrap her mind in the concept there was another Serafim aside from her.

There should only be one Serafim.

"Abby," Iris called her name solemnly. "You can take all the credit from this. I only want that creature to be gone, after that you can return to your continent and prove them wrong. The rumor about you is wrong. No one needs to know I have the first Serafim's life essence and we can part way after everything ended."

Iris learned how to choose her words carefully by seeing how her mate handled the people around her.

Months ago, Cane had taught her how to ignite someone's interest. Everyone had their own desire and only by observing what it could be, you could turn the table to your advantage.

And Iris had learned Abby enough to know the rumor out there about her to be the weakest link, had hurt her. Abby suffered from that and Iris recognized it, since she had been on her shoes for a long time too.

She knew how it felt to desire power and prove herself that she was useful. How she was very desperate to get validation from people around her. From Cane...

Iris remembered how Redmond reprimanded her about how she would bend over to satisfy Cane, to get acknowledgment from him. There wouldn't be a 'no' from her if it was Cane's request. She suffered because of the member of the Howling Wolf pack too, because she wanted them to accept her...

Acknowledgment and acceptance were such scary desires...

That was how desperate Iris was.

Therefore, she knew what Abby was feeling right now, more or less...

"Don't think too far. There is no evidence for you to have the first Serafim's life essence. There must be some explanation why the Sylph appeared and about your divine power." Abby balled her fists. She wanted to take Iris for her offer, but she felt so low to claim such thing. More so, it would mean she admitted that Iris's divine power was even stronger than her! She couldn't accept that!

Iris shook her head. She didn't want to sing the same tune like Abby and entertain her denial. "I don't need to prove anything to you, Abby. You know that deep down, you must have known that my divine power is stronger than you." Iris's voice sounded calm, her tone didn't even change when she laid out the truth. "You can keep denying this, but then let me ask you this question; do you really think with your own power, you can take down Decratric?"

Cane had a plan for this kingdom, he wanted to build a new rule in this continent, Iris knew about that since the very beginning, but his plan all ruined because of this unexpected event with Decratric.

This creature was the variable they didn't expect, the unforeseen circumstances and they needed to deal with it first before Cane could resume what he had worked on.

Iris couldn't care less about Lu, Na and Decratric's past. Their story was not for her and Cane to live on.

"You don't need to discuss this matter with anyone else. No one needs to know about this fact, because destroying Decratric is what matters right now, after that, no one will care about the detail. That's the main goal of the Holy Kingdom, right? Getting rid of the evil's existence like Decratric and his worshippers."

Of course, Iris learned about all this from Haco.

However, before she could get the answer she wanted, Liam had barged into the room and approached Abby, behind the knights, Zephyr came to Iris.

"What happened?" Abby asked, she was startled by the look on Liam's face.

"We need to gather in the main hall," Liam replied curtly. "They are closing down the pack house."

Hearing that, Iris looked at Zephyr, asking for confirmation but the warrior only told her that he would explain on the way to the main hall.

"No, I need to get my baby!" Iris's voice was stern.

"Don't worry, luna, Rora is with Grace and Hanna, they must be already in the main hall right now." Zephyr reassured her that the baby was alright. "The alpha has sent warriors to ensure her safety. We need to go there too."
